This little history of the Whitakers was made up solely for the information of my wife, her children, brothers and sister and their children. An extra copy of the record having been made, it is being sent to the Genealogy Department of the Public Library of Cincinnati, Ohio, as many of my wife's relatives live in that vicinity, and as a record such as this is highly perishable, and subject to loss by fire, etc it seems proper to me to have this copy where it will be preserved and available for inspection. Perhaps some day some one will write a Genealogy of the Whitakers in United States, and if so, in this little book will be found some information of accuracy for it.

The original of this book, in which are original documents, letters, photostats, a photograph of the painting of Nathaniel Whitaker; photostat of Jonathan Whitaker's Will, numbers of photos, etc, etc, is in the possession of No. 1125, Glen Guy Whitaker, No. 2907 Fifth Avenue, Los Angeles, California. He also has one of the Whitaker Charts.

PREFACE.

The Whitaker History herein contained is the merest scratching of the surface of a vast store of documents by which all links in the chain could be connected. It would not take so long, nor be such a task, to connect up the Whittakers we find in Concord, Mass. shortly after the landing of the MAYFLOWER to our known Jonathan Whitaker appearing first in the extant records of Sharon, Mass. in the year 1720. The family names are similar, and in these days family names were retained generation after generation. For instance in the Birth Records of Concord, Mass. we find a record: "Sarah Whitaker, ye daughter of Jonathan Whitaker and Sarah his wife was born Novembr ye 25th 1695." So we know there was a Jonathan Whitaker living in Concord less than 75 years after the landing of the Pilgrims. Then right over at the little town of Chelmsford, Mass. we find an old record of the marriage of the above named Jonathan Whittaker and Sarah Teothaker at Boston November 15, 1694, the daughter Sarah being born just a year following the marriage. In these old records we find the names Nathaniel and Jonathan, and right in the family of our first known Jonathan Whitaker we find he named his sons Nathaniel and Jonathan. This evidence cannot be ignored.

Another link in the chain of evidence is the migration of the Whitakers. It is exactly in the migration of these times. No one suspected that Abraham Lincoln's ancestors were from New England until genealogists scanned the old records in the archives of the colonies. When the work was finished and the chain connected up, it was found the Lincolns moved to the Jersies from New England; thence Pennsylvania and Maryland; thence Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois. This must have been the general route of the pioneers, and the Whitakers fell into it also. Over a a period of over 200 years we find them in New England, the Jersies, New York and Pennsylvania, Kentucky and Ohio. The written records of their doings along this trail are there for the examining. They were generally prominent, leaders, Judges, Doctors, Ministers; men who are bound to be frequently mentioned in the old Civil and Church records.

In the archives of Dartmouth College might be found the history of the Whitakers running into England. We know positively the College has a large quantity of Nathaniel Whitaker's letters that have never been published - or perhaps even examined.

All this however is for the Whitakers to carry on, and is beyond the scope of the Family Record that this intended to be.

The Motto on the Coat of Arms.

FAITH CONQUERS - TRUTH RETAINS.

ORIGIN OF THE NAME.

According to most theories the name was originally "White Acre." However one Genealogist prefers to think that it is derived from "Wihtgar", the name borne by the nephew of Cedric, King of the West Saxons.

The name Whitaker (variously spelled) has been prominent in England for nearly 800 years, and it is believed that all who bear it can trace their ancestry back to about 1100 A. D., to Sir Knight Simon de Whiteacre, whose lineal descendants for about 200 years were King's Commissioners, as well as Knights, etc, as per the Doomsday Survey of William the Conquerer, and Dugdale's "Antiquities of Warwickshire." The lands of Sir Simon de Whiteacre are still known by the name of "Whateacre." The family Coat of Arms with a white horse as the Crest indicates connection with the Wiltshire branch of the Whitakers, whose parent stock were from the Holme, Lancashire, whose ancestors were undoubtedly a branch from the original Warwickshire, England, family, whose arms were similar.

THE COAT OF ARMS.

There are two Coat of Arms, and quite a controversy, as detailed below, due to the fact that Burke made an error in illustrating same in his Book in 1840, many, particularly in America using the one illustrated by him. Burke left off the "fesse." There is, however, the bare possibility that there were two Coat of Arms in England, as will be seen.

Ephriam S. Whitaker illustrates his Chart with a Coat of Arms, less the fesse. The following is a quotation from the letter of Ephriam Seward Whitaker, the Genealogist, to subscribers to the Family Chart, on completion of the work:

> "After many years of research and labor I have collected records of nearly all the descendants to the present time (about 1900) of our early ancestor, JONATHAN WHITAKER, comprising eight generations, and about 900 names; also the origin of the family surname, one of the oldest in England, and much interesting family history, as well as the Coat-of-Arms borne by our ancestors, with Crest and Motto of our own branch, reproduced from an old seal of Jonathan Whitaker, an heirloom in the family."

If the above statement of Ephriam Whitaker is absolutely correct that the illustration on his Chart was made from the old seal of Jonathan Whitaker, then the Coat of Arms without a fesse was in use long prior to the publishing of Burke's Book.

On his Chart Ephriam Whitaker has stated that Professor Daniel Kimball Whitaker, grandson of the Rev. Nathaniel Whitaker "had in possession the family Coat of Arms."

In a letter from Ephriam Whitaker to Mrs Shevlin of Portland, Oregon, he says: "The original die of the Whitaker Coat of Arms was among the Reverend Nathaniel Whitaker's effects, and was used by him."

As Nathaniel Whitaker was born in 1730 and died 1795, if there was a seal or coat of arms among his effects, as stated, it is ample proof that it existed and was used or recognized as a family possession long before 1840 when Burke published his book. Nathaniel Whitaker visited England in 1765/6 and it is among the possibilities that during his visit, he interested himself in tracing his lineage and possessing himself of the seal of the coat of arms borne by his ancestors, and that he returned to America with the seal which was to become "an heirloom in the possession of his grandson Professor Daniel Kimball Whitaker. This would fully explain why Nathaniel Whitaker had this heirloom to hand to his branch, rather than to another of the sons of Jonathan Whitaker. Daniel Kimball Whitaker had but one son who grew to manhood, Edward S. Whitaker. This branch of the family had removed to the South. Edward lived in Augusta, Georgia, and he had a son - another Edward S. Whitaker - who went to New Orleans. This latter Edward had but one child - a daughter named Ethel Whitaker. There are neither dates nor addresses given on the Chart, but Ethel might be fifty years of age - more or less - though probably now married. It is extremely probable that Ethel Whitaker has the original seal of the coat of arms as brought to America.

As Ephriam Seward Whitaker has plainly stated that the seal was among the effects of Nathaniel, and not in his own possession when he made the Chart, could we assume that he, instead of sending South to Daniel's heirs, have copied what he presumed was a correct reproduction of the Coat of Arms and Crest as published by Burke? With this assumption, it would explain the omission of the fesse, as in Burke, yet it would not deny the possession of the seal of the Coat of Arms as being among the effects of Nathaniel Whitaker.

Ephriam Seward Whitaker's father was Stephen Madison Whitaker and his mother was Mary Ann Gage, an aunt of Governor Henry Gage of California. Stephen Madison Whitaker was brother of Ephriam Mallory Whitaker, the father of Grenville Whitaker. Ephriam and Grenville were therefore first cousins. Grenville Whitaker was a Stationer, in business in Washington, D.C. He must have discussed the lay out of the Chart with his cousin (who was named for Grenville's own father.) Daniel Whitaker's brother - a distant cousin - was an Auditor in the Treasury Department at Washington, D.C. at that time also. Since Grenville Whitaker was interested in engravings, and in that business, he made for himself a die of the family crest in his own establishment and it is still in Washington, the property of some member of his family. His son, William Ephriam Whitaker, living for many years in Los Angeles, once borrowed this die of his mother and had some stationery made, a sheet of which is annexed, presented to the author by Miss Pansy Louise Whitaker in Los Angeles, 1935. She states that he made her a present of a box of this stationery many years ago but that she still has the box almost intact, saying: "however interesting the subject may be, and much as I would wish to trace to its most authentic source the possession of the arms in the family, I still do not consider it proper or necessary for an American family of as early origin as our own to use such a letter head."

Miss Fanny Louise Whitaker, Los Angeles, California, under date 31 January 1935, states:

"In 1930 I received a letter from a firm in London offering me 'a very fine old engraved Ex Libris Armorial Bookplate of the same surname as yours, bearing the Coat of Arms, Crest and Motto. It appears to be of the Period of about 1760.' My sister Belle, the wife of Judge R. Morgan Galbreth of this City was going to Europe at that time with her husband and their two daughters. She called on the London dealer and bought the plate. It is that of Edward Whitaker of the Inner and Middle Temple, a noted lawyer. He lived about 1720 - 1750. This plate differs from the seal we have under discussion. The shape of the shield is different. It bears the fesse, a horizontal band across the middle of the shield. The three diamonds or lozenges are in the same position as on ours. The white horse on identical bar forms the crest, but the London plate bears no motto. It is a beautiful piece of engraving, and it is further ornamented by a quantity of garlands and arabesques which add to it as a work of art. It is not, however, identical with the Whitaker coat of arms which we have. The following description is on the back of the plate:

'The Whitacre (Westbury, Wiltshire) arms are:
Three maccles, or. two and one, with a label of three points, or. Crest: a horse, passant, or.
(Granted 16 March 1560.)' "

It will be particularly noticed that the engraved plate shows the fesse; the description on the back does not mention the fesse.

Mrs Edwin C. Shevlin, 810 N. W. 20th Avenue, Portland, Oregon under date January 12, 1935, states:

"..... I believe I have as much information as any one on Jonathan Whitaker's descendants.....It cost me $150.00 to obtain some research by a Long Island Genealogist a number of years ago and the only result he obtained was the full name and ancestry of Jonathan Whitaker's wife Elizabeth..... Years ago I had some correspondence with E.B.Whitaker and bought a Chart of him, which I lost. After following many clews the last two or three years I located his nephew near Geneva, New York, so a year ago last June, on my way to New York City, I stopped off at Geneva to see him. His name is Roy E. Whitaker, R.D.3 Stanley, New York.....He and his wife were very nice. He had a number of E.B.W's Charts and insisted on giving me one..... E.B.Whitaker wrote me between 1905 - 1910 "the original die of the Whitaker coat of arms was among Rev.Nathaniel Whitaker's effects and used by him." "Grenville A. Whitaker, Attorney in Washington, D.C. probably has the duplicate of the seal made by his father Ephriam Mallory Whitaker who died in Washington, D.C." I obtained the address of Grenville A. W's widow in Penn Yan where I spent part of my five days while I was in Geneva and

"have received two letters from her. She does not know how her father in law E. M. W. obtained the coat of arms.....What I would like to know, was the Whitaker Coat of Arms used by our branch before 1840, when Burke's Book was published, and the proof that we were using it before 1840..I ..... When I was in London three or four years ago, a Mr Butler of the College of Arms told me that we should have a fesse (a band across the arms) on ours, otherwise he would have to conclude that the family had adopted it after Burke's Book was published, as many families had done for their family name. (Burke had left the fesse off by mistake.).....Rev. Nathaniel Whitaker visited England .....and wrote many letters home, most of them now being in Dartmouth College. I have seen them, but the penmanship is very fine and difficult to read without a great deal of practice. One of the Professors there expects to write a Treatise on them. He told me they were full of humor and not like the dry reading of most letters of the time....."

Perhaps among the letters in the Dartmouth College Library might be found original and authentic information as to how Nathaniel Whitaker came to have the die, etc.

Their are several traditions in the American Whitakers concerning their arrival in America. One is to the effect that three brothers of the name embarked in England for America; that the vessel in which they sailed was wrecked and that only one of them, - Jonathan Whitaker, - survived, and who settled in Sharon, Mass. Another tradition states that all three brothers reached America, one of them named Richard Whitaker settling in Orange County, New York and having three sons, John Whitaker, Squire Whitaker and Benjamin Whitaker. The name of the third brother is not known, but he is reported to have settled in Connecticut. There was a Rev. Alexander Whitaker who early came to Virginia and settled in Henrico in 1611, where he built a Church and a parsonage. There he baptised Pocahontas, she taking the name of Rachael, and in the year 1613 he married her to John Rolfe.

WHITAKER FAMILY, by Frances Cowles. Copyright 1918 by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

For many years there was a tradition in this family that it was very necessary to preserve the old spelling - WHITAKER - instead of Whitaker. In fact it is said that the founder of one branch of the family who came to New Jersey in 1665 assured his descendants that there were estates in England that they might some day claim if they but retained this spelling. For some reason, however, the tendency to change the spelling was stronger than the tradition and now the old spelling is extremely rare. The Coat of Arms is described: Sable, a fesse between three muscles, argent, and the crest is a horse passant argent.

Richard Whitaker is said to have left his home in London at the time of the great plague, or after the great fire. That makes the time of his coming about 1665/6. He probably landed in Maryland and is said to have been the first Englishman that set foot on the land of West Jersey. There he cut down a bush in the name of King Charles II and thereby claimed the land for that Monarch. It is apparent that he was at the time, or soon became, a member of the Society of Friends or Quakers, and the records show that he was one of the Council or Proprietors chosen by Penwick, the founder of the Colony, to govern West Jersey. He held this office between the years 1676 and 1702. He married Elizabeth Adkin in 1679 and lived for the most of his life in Salem, New Jersey. There he kept a general store and owned a sloop in which he traded with New York and New England. His son Richard had a son Nathaniel who married Mary Ann Dixon. The family spread rapidly and many are the descendants to be found in New Jersey, Pennsylvania and States to the west.

Another distinct New Jersey family of the name traces descent to Jonathan Whitaker who was born in England about 1690 and died in Basking Ridge in 1763. He left his native land on account of religious prosecution, so the old records state, and settled first in Connecticut and then in New Jersey. He lived in Huntington in 1725, thence making his way to New Jersey. He was a strict Puritan and so eager was he for the spread of his religion that he left a portion of his Estate for the education of the Indians. His son Nathaniel went on with the good work. He was born in 1739 and died in Hampton, Virginia. Having secured his education at Princeton, New Jersey he entered the Ministry of the Presbyterian Church and took charge of a congregation at Woodbridge, N.J., later one at Norwich, Conn., another in Salem, Mass., and finally at Norridgewock, Maine. He visited England in the course of his career and there collected one thousand pounds sterling for the founding of Wheelock's Indian School in Lebanon, N.H., the institution which formed the nucleus of Dartmouth College at Hanover, N.H.

(It is with the descendants of this Jonathan Whitaker that this book is to deal.)

There were also Whitakers in Virginia. A George Whitaker was a passenger on board the "William of London" on a trip from Virginia to London in 1654, and a Richard Whitaker who arrived in Virginia during the early Colonial period was the ancestor of the many Whitakers now found in Warwick County, Virginia. It is said the family are numerous in the vicinity of Enfield, N. C.

JONATHAN WHITAKER.

Tradition says that Jonathan Whitaker was one of the three brothers who embarked for America from England; that the vessel was cast away, the others lost, but that he was saved and settled in New England. (Littell's "First Settlers of Passaic Valley,N.J.")

Governor Voorhees of New Jersey, a descendant, says: "Jonathan Whitaker left England on account of religious persecution, and settled first in Connecticut, then to Long Island, then to New Jersey."

Mary Voorhees stated: "My mother understood that Jonathan Whitaker was from Brampton, Cumberland County, England, but a search of the Parish records of that locality show no one of that name at that period."

Ephriam Mallory Whitaker stated: "I understood from my father, Jonathan III that Jonathan Whitaker settled first at Norwich, Conn., married and went to Long Island, and then to New Jersey."

Hatfield's "History of Elizabeth, New Jersey," says: "Jonathan Whitaker was one of the Associate Proprietors of Elizabeth Town, New Jersey in 1739."

Professor Daniel Kimball Whitaker stated in his written (unpublished) "Life of Rev. Nathaniel Whitaker" that Nathaniel was the son of Jonathan Whitaker who emigrated from Wiltshire, England.

There must have been two Jonathan Whitaker's in New England about the same time, as Caulkins "Norwich,Connecticut" states on page 242: "Whitaker, Jonathan - First mentioned 1719. Married 1718 Abigail Lambert." This is confirmed in "Norwich Vital Records, Volume I, page 51: "Jonathan Whitacer & Abigaill Lambert were married the 5th day of November, Anno Domi 1718." "Abigaill Whitacer, daughter of Jonathan & his wife Abigaill was born the 6th day of June 1722, Sarah Whitacer born 1; December 1724, Anne Whitacer born 22 August 1726, Elizabeth Whitacer born 23 June 1730."

Miss Fanny Louise Whitaker,Los Angeles,California,1915,states: "My impression is that Jonathan,the head of the family here charted,was a descendant of one John Whitaker and wife Elizabeth of Waterton,Mass., who had sons John, born 1662 and Jonathan born 1664; afterward was at Concord,Mass,and was probably also the father of sons David and Nathaniel, but am unable to find connecting records. Jonathan (head of chart) was probably born between 1688 and 1695; probably twice married: with wife Elizabeth lived at Huntington,Long Island in 1734; they united with the Presbyterian Church in 1735; purchased land of Epenetus Platt in 1739 at Huntington; purchased land west of Elizabeth, N.J. in 1739 and land at Mine Brook,Somerset County,New Jersey in 1752."

Dr.Oscar M. Voorhees,D.D.,57 Lincoln Avenue,New Brunswick, N.J.in a recent article on the Whitakers of New Jersey states that Jonathan Whitaker was born in Wiltshire, England about 1690,and came to America about 1720 settling first at Sharon, Mass. This is also the statement of Professor Daniel Kimball Whitaker,and would seem to be the fact.,as a comparison of the births of the children of Jonathan Whitaker and Abigail Lambert of Norwich and Jonathan Whitaker and Elizabeth Jarvis of Huntington,N.Y. indicate two families and not two marriages on the part of Jonathan. The Jonathan Whitaker of Norwich,Conn.is evidently the one mentioned by Miss Fanny Louise Whitaker as being the son of John and Elizabeth Whitaker. Until evidence is produced to the contrary we will accept Dr. Voorhees statement as being correct.

WHITACRE - WHITTACRE - WHITAKER - WHITTAKER.

Name of English origin. It appears on the Hundred Rolls as early as 1273. The north part of a graveyard allotted to the poor was called whittaker, from wite, a penalty, and acre, a place of burial for criminals. A culprit who could not discharge the penalty or wite became a "witeheow" and was buried in the whitacre.

Another definition is "the northeast part of a flat or shoal - the middle ground."

ABRAHAM, born England 1590 - 95 settled Salem, Mass. 1637; afterwards resided Haverhill, Mass.

JONATHAN WHITAKER.

Jonathan Whitaker was born in Wiltshire, England, about 1690 and came to America about 1720, settling first at Sharon, Mass. He removed soon thereafter to Huntington, Long Island and there married Elizabeth Jervis (Jarvis) who was the daughter of Eliphalet Jervis of that place. At Huntington Jonathan Whitaker and his wife Elizabeth became members of the Congregational Church under the Pastorate of Reverend Ebenezer Prime, and here seven of their eight children were baptised, as follows: Nathaniel Whitaker, Eliphalet Whitaker, Elizabeth Whitaker, Mary Whitaker, Jonathan Whitaker, Isaac Whitaker and Phebe Whitaker.

Jonathan Whitaker located permanently in Somerset County, New Jersey between 1736 and 1739, as we find him defending the character of his wife before the Presbtry at Bound Brook, New Jersey 1 August 1739. the account of the meeting reading as follows:

> "Mr Whitaker (Jonathan Whitaker) having offered a petition to the Presb: Showing his Dissatisfaction with the Judgment of the Session at Raskin Ridge, relating some scandalous reports concerning his wife, and desiring an Appeal from them unto us, but the Presb: understood both from Mr Cross (the Pastor) and Mr Whitaker, then present, that no Appeal was desired from their Judgment before satisfaction was given according to it we judged it unprecedented and of dangerous Consequence to the peace of the Churches to comply with the Petition; and very inexpedient in the present Case, when a main difficulty complained of is, by Mr Cross, offered to be remedied, viz: That wherein the Judgment of the Session by some ambiguous expressions may be constructed to reflect upon Mrs Whitaker's character plainer shall be inserted showing their true intent. That Presb: likewise do in the fear of God Admonish Mr Cross to use more Caution in his expressions for the future relating to Jno Chambers, his family and others, and study the things that make for peace."

(The last reference is to a previous complaint adjudicated before the petition of Mr Whitaker was considered.)

Here we see that before 1739 Jonathan Whitaker had become a member of the Church and was sufficiently established in the community to be jealous of the good name of his wife, and so anxious to vindicate her that he carried an appeal to the Presbtry. At this time the son Nathaniel (who became a preacher) was only 9 years of age, and hence certainly spent his boyhood in Somerset County.

Jonathan Whitaker on 19 December 1752 took title to two adjoining tracts located on both sides of the Nine Brook, and aggregating 407½ acres. This land comprised the north western portion of a large tract of 7500 acres surveyed for William Penn in June 1717 "In right of said Penn's second addition to the second dividend of said Penn's propriety in East New Jersey." For 255 pounds "lawful money of New Jersey," i. e., at the rate of 12 shillings 6 pence per acre, Thomas and Richard Penn, surviving sons and heirs of William Penn transferred these tracts to "JONATHAN WHITAKER of Baskenridge in the Province of New Jersey, Esquire." The parchment deed or indenture is still in existence, and is indeed an elaborate production of the scrivener's art. In size it is 26 by 29 inches, and there are 54 lines of writing containing about 35 words each, making in all nearly 2000 words. The fact that a "messuage, sawmill, buildings and other improvements" are mentioned is evidence that the tracts had been occupied by squatters or tenants; that some of the land had been cleared and that it was ready for occupancy. This would indicate that Jonathan Whitaker and perhaps also his sons Eliphalet and Jonathan with their families moved at once upon the land, - if indeed they had not occupied it before the indenture was ready for delivery. It was not until 6 March 1753 that the signing of the indenture was attested by Ralph Smith (of New Germantown) one of the witnesses before James Alexander, "one of her Majesty's Council for New Jersey," and father of William Alexander, later known to history as the Earl of Sterling. He was for many years owner of a plantation at Basking Ridge, the same becoming later Lord Stirling's Seat. From the statement in the deed quoted above it is evident that Jonathan Whitaker had become a resident of Basking Ridge before the purchase and it may well be that he moved to that section because two of his daughters had already made it their home. How long he had been living there, or where he made his home is not known. In Hatfield's "History of Elizabeth" it is stated that a Jonathan Whitaker was one of the associate proprietors of Elizabeth-Town in 1729, and the tradition is well defined that he lived there for a time before coming to Somerset County. Ephriam S. Whitaker of Cincinnati, Ohio, prepared a large chart in 1900 on which many of the family lines are traced down to the present generation but little is given respecting collateral lines. A writing of transfer on the back of the above mentioned deed bearing date 7 July 1763, for the sum of 625 pounds current money of East New Jersey at eight shillings per ounce, Jonathan Whitaker conveyed to his son Jonathan Whitaker, Junior the whole of the aforesaid tract, excepting about 163 acres previously sold and conveyed to his son Eliphalet. From the date in 1752 when the tracts were purchased, for 113 years a large portion of the property was in the possession of some member of the family; the last 25 years prior to 1913 the owner was Mrs Sarah (Whitaker) Voorhees, a great grand daughter of the original purchaser. The house into which Jonathan Whitaker moved in 1752 was situated a short distance west of the present Nine Brook school house and not far from the farm house of Mr William H. Page of New York City. Jonathan Whitaker was then 62 years of age and continued to live on the estate a little over ten years. While no absolute record of the fact remains, it is no doubt true that he was a member of the Basking Ridge Presbyterian Church, as were members of his family. The distance they would need to travel to attend services was approximately five miles.

For evidence of his piety we are referred to the tradition that religious differences led to his leaving the Homeland; to the fact that one son became a preacher, and to the provisions of his will. In his will he terms himself:

"JONATHAN WHITAKER, of Bernards Town - Yeoman."

It was executed 12 August 1763 when he was "sick and weak in body, but of perfect mind and memory," and was proved 14 October 1763. John Roy and Edward Lewis are named as Executors. The following charitable bequest is interesting:

> "It is my will, and I do order that the sum of seven per ct. be taken of the whole, and applied to the following use, viz: to assist in supporting a Missionary to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ among the Indians, but if no Committee is appointed for that purpose, nor Mission carried on in the term of 5 years, then it is my will, and I do order that the said sum, with the interest thereof, be paid to the Reverend Mr Wheelock in Conetecot in New England, to be by him applied to the education of Indian children, but if that school should cease, then I give and bequeath the same to the College of Nassau Hall in Prince Town, New Jersey, for the education of Indian scholars, hoping that whoever shall receive the same will be faithful in applying the same to the use herein mentioned."

It was not until 1775 that a Bond of 60 pounds was given by Jonathan Whitaker, Junior to the Trustees of the College of New Jersey in fulfilment of the terms of the bequest. Elisha Boudinot acknowledged the receipt "for the Trustees, being one of them." The delay in paying the bequest was no doubt due to the uncertainty as to the continuance of the Indian school in Connecticut. In disposing of the remainder of his estate Jonathan Whitaker mentions three sons, - Eliphalet, Jonathan and Nathaniel, and one daughter - Elizabeth. No mention is made of Isaac, Sarah, Phebe and Mary, though it is known that Mary and Phebe survived him. It has therefore been inferred that the other two died in early life s.p. In accordance with the English idea of primogeniture, four fifths of the whole estate, less the 7 per cent, was left to Jonathan Whitaker, Junior, the eldest son, who five weeks before his father's death had purchased about 345 acres of the estate, including the homestead; the balance (163 acres) having been previously purchased by the second son Eliphalet. His wife, Elizabeth Whitaker, did not long survive her husband, for her will executed 13 October 1763 was proved 20 March 1764. In it she directs that no liquors be given at the funeral "as I esteem that practice inconsistent with the solemnities of a funeral." The same four children are mentioned, Mary and Phebe being again strangely omitted, thus confirming us in the conclusion that the others were not living. As we have seen, Eliphalet Whitaker became owner of the southern portion of the estate. Here he continued to live until his children were grown, when he removed to Georgia, where some of his descendants still reside. Two of his children remained in Basking Ridge, New Jersey, viz: Samuel Whitaker and Elizabeth Whitaker.

The present owner of the Whitaker Estate, Mr.William M. Page, Attorney at Law, 55 Liberty Street, New York City, N.Y. has had placed in the hall of the old portion of the homestead a bronze title tablet which recites the leading dates of ownership, both of the land and the older portion of the building:

WILL OF THOMAS JARVIS.
(Father-in-law of Jonathan Whitaker.)

In the name of God Amen, August 17, 1732, I, Thomas Jarvis of Huntington, in Suffolk County, brick layer, being very sick, I leave to my son Thomas 2 acres of land near Ground Nut Hollow..... on condition that he allow his mother - my wife Millicen - the use of ½ of the house I now live in and find her firewood, and keep a cow..... I leave to my son-in-law JONATHAN WHITAKER 5 shillings. I leave my wife Millicen all movable estate..... Proved September 14, 1732.

Two other abstracts of New York Wills are here inserted as interesting, inasmuch as Whitakers are mentioned in both, one in 1708. These Whitakers are evidently descended from the Richard Whitaker who cut down the bush in New Jersey and claimed the land for his King: One will also shows that these early settlers had slaves:

No.1 PHEBE WHITAKER.

Was born in 1716/7 and died in 1773. She married John Wood who died in 1801. No further history.

No.2 MARY WHITAKER.

Was born in 1718 and married first Samuel Brown. They had at least one child, a daughter:

No.9 Mary Brown, who married a Mr.Cross. No further history.

Samuel Brown owned at the time of his death the house in which General Lee was afterward captured during the Revolution. He died in December 1763, and by his will executed 17 June 1764 and proved 23 December 1764 he left 200 pounds unto the Christian Society called Presbyterian in Basking Ridge and Bernard's Town. This legacy was to be kept invested in perpetuity, the interest being used annually in part payment of the Minister's salary. On the receipt of this bounty the Trustees secured a new record book. If any had been used previously,it has not been preserved. To his widow Samuel Brown left his gold sleeve buttons, 300 pounds and the use and profit of his house and lands. The witnesses to the will were: "Stirling," Stephen Ogden and Thomas Talmage.

Mary (Whitaker) Brown married secondly Ebenezer White of whom we know nothing except that his daughter married Stephen Whitaker, a grand son of Jonathan Whitaker, Senior. This child was:

No.10 Susan White

Ebenezer White and his wife probably lived in the house in which the wife had lived with her former husband, but whether she was the "Widow White" who kept the Tavern there at the time General Lee was captured we have not learned. She went to Huntington, Long Island for a while,but returned and spent the rest of her days at Basking Ridge. By her will she disposed of her possessions with exceeding minuteness and imitated her mother in forbidding the use of liquors at her funeral. In view of the fact that Mary Whitaker was not mentioned in her mother's will,it may be that she died without issue, and that Susan White was not the daughter of Mary (Whitaker) White,but of Ebenezer White by a previous marriage. However, Susan is referred to as the cousin of Stephen Whitaker whom she married.

No.3 JONATHAN WHITAKER, JUNIOR.

Was the second owner of the homestead. He was born in 1723 and married as early as 1746 Mary Miller,of whose ancestry and family connections nothing positively is known. Shortly before his father's death he purchased the larger portion of the estate and occupied it until his death in 1786. Several of his children removed to the Lake region of New York and their descendants may be found there,and in many of the States further west.

On the death of Jonathan Whitaker Junior in 1786 his widow Mary purchased the farm at Sheriff's sale. This seems to have been made necessary by reason of the difficulty of otherwise securing a clear title, the heirs being so widely scattered. Jonathan Whitaker,Jr. left no will, but at Trenton, New Jersey are recorded the wills of his father, mother, widow and his son Nathaniel Whitaker. Jonathan Whitaker Junior died 17 June 1786. His children were:

No.11 Nathaniel Whitaker
12 Jonathan Whitaker III
13 Rebecca Whitaker
14 Sarah (Sally) Whitaker
15 Mary (Polly) Whitaker
16 Phebe Whitaker
17 Stephen Whitaker

In the list of inscriptions at the Basking Ridge, N. J. Presbyterian Church yard is the following:

No.4 ELIZABETH WHITAKER.

Married Stephen Ogden in 1740. They were both born in 1724, and he died in Basking Ridge, N. J. 8 January 1764. He was a great grandson of the pioneer John Ogden of Elizabeth Town, New Jersey. The lived in Basking Ridge situated just across the road from the house in which General Charles Lee was captured 13 December 1776. Stephen Ogden was an agriculturalist, and a free holder in Somerset County 17 July 1753. He died intestate and his widow was made Administratrix 20 March 1764. Their children were:

No.18 Jonathan Ogden
19 Nathaniel Ogden
20 Isaac Ogden
21 Sally Ogden
22 Phebe Ogden
23 Elizabeth Ogden

As we have seen, Jonathan Whitaker died in 1763; his widow in March 1764; his son-in-law, Samuel Brown, December 1763 and Stephen Ogden on 8 January 1764. Thus the two daughters, Elizabeth Whitaker and Mary Whitaker were each bereft of husband and parents within seven months.

Four years after Stephen Ogden's death, his widow, Elizabeth (Whitaker) Ogden married Samuel Roberts of Dorrunda Town (21 January 1766) on the same day that her daughter Elizabeth married Dr.Barnet. There are no children reported from her second marriage.

No.5 SARAH WHITAKER.

Was born in 1721. No History. Probably died in youth.

No.6 ISAAC WHITAKER.

Was born in 1728. He is not mentioned in the parents' wills, and probably died in youth. There is a possibility that he left home, as we have the record of an Isaac Whitaker in New Hampshire. The connection is not proved, but the record is inserted here as a matter of information.

HISTORY OF HENNIKER, MERRIMACK COUNTY, N. H. (page 785)

Isaac Whitaker resided in the east part of town near the house that stands northerly from the covered bridge across the Contoocook, and near the pond that bears his name. He had a large family, among whom were:

a Stephen Whitaker married Rachael ? and lived with his father. His wife died 5 October 1823. They had:

No.7 NATHANIEL WHITAKER.

Of the children of Jonathan Whitaker and Elizabeth (Jervis) Whitaker their son Nathaniel attained the greatest personal distinction. He was born in 1730, studied at the College of New Jersey and was graduated in September 1752, just three months before his father took title to the Pine Brook Estate. He then studied Theology and was licensed by the Presbtry of New York in 1753, it is said. However, he had no permanent charge until 1755, for on 10 December that year he was ordained and installed Pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Woodbridge, New Jersey.

Four years later he was released to become Pastor of a recently organized congregation in Chelsea near Norwich, Connecticut where he succeeded in building a Church. Here he became acquainted with Rev.Eleazar Wheelock, then Pastor of the Church at Lebanon,Conn., and founder of a school which grew into prominence and later became known as Here's Indian Charity School. One of the first Indian pupils at the school was Samson Occom, who was later ordained a clergyman by the Presbytery of Suffolk, Long Island. The school being in need of more funds than could be secured in the Colonies,and appeal was made for help from abroad. Rev. George Whitfield having suggested that the presence of an Indian preacher would greatly help the project,it was determined to send Occom to Great Britain,and Nathaniel Whitaker was selected to accompany him. In order to secure proper authentication Nathaniel Whitaker traveled long distances and obtained the signatures of many prominent men including "Stirling," Governor William Franklin, Chief Justice Frederick Smith and President Samuel Finley of the College of New Jersey. This was in the fall of 1765 and it is practically that on the journey Nathaniel Whitaker visited his relatives at Basking Ridge and Nine Brock. His fellow members of the eastern district of New London County gave him the following certificate of character:

"The Rev. Mr Nathaniel Whitaker of Chelsey in Norwich,Pastor of the Church and congregation there situate in the midst of us, is well known by us,and accordingly received as a man of good understanding and learning,of probity and piety; one of good ministerial gifts and of very happy furniture for public service, whose praise is over in all the Churches,as he stands in a good light in our view and esteem of him,both as to his natural and ministerial character, we heartily recommend him."

The Rev. Mr Wheelock prepared a long Memorial,which begins as follows:

"To the People of God in England, Scotland and Ireland,and all who desire the advancement of the Kingdom of the Great Redeemer: Where ever the Bearer, the Rev. Nathaniel Whitaker shall by the Providence of God, have opportunity to make known the important errand on which he comes, I hope sufficiently recommended to charitable notice and respect."

Nathaniel Whitaker and Samson Occom sailed from Boston, Mass. two days before Christmas 1765 and they arrived in London on 6 February following: The Boston Gazette of December 23, 1765 (P3/1) states that Occom and the Reverend Nathaniel Whitaker sailed that morning for England. Landing at Brixham,Devonshire on 1 February 1766 the two rode on horseback to Exeter; thence in a coach to Salisbury and reached London on the sixth. There they were hospitably entertained at the house of Mr DeBerit, and the next day were conducted by John Smith to the house of Whitefield. For nearly two years they traveled throughout England and Scotland presenting their cause where ever they could get a hearing. Occom being the first ordained Indian preacher to visit Great Britain drew great crowds and made a strong appeal for funds. King George III started the subscription with a gift of 200 pounds. Lord Dartmouth, then Secretary for the Colonies, was exceedingly cordial and his favor proved a great help. The total amount received in England was nearly nine thousand five hundred pounds, and the contributions of Scotland brought the amount well above twelve thousand pounds.

After considerable discussion, instead of enlarging the Indian School at Lebanon, Conn. it was decided to found a College in New Hampshire, and Dartmouth College was the result, with the Indian School as an adjunct. Thus the results of Nathaniel Whitaker's efforts are the fine old New England College that is now over 175 years old, and it is quite evident that his interest in Indian education had something to do with his father's bequest, and the naming of Wheelock's Indian Charity School as a possible beneficiary.

Rev. Nathaniel Whitaker was 35 years of age when he went abroad and he was away from home two and one half years. By order of Lord Dartmouth his portrait was painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds (some say by Chamberlain) and the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred on him by St Andrews University. A year after his return to the Colonies he was called to the pastorate of a Church in Salem, Mass., where he continued to serve for 15 years, until 1784. Here, after a fire, he built a Church patterned after Whitfield's in London, and called "The Tabernacle." During the revolution he was an ardent patriot and two of his sermons were printed and dedicated to George Washington. His next charge was at Norregwock, Maine, where he built his third Church. He left there in 1790 and later went to Hampton, Virginia, where he died January 26, 1795, in his 65th year. His son Jonathan Whitaker was graduated from Harvard in 1797, became a Clergyman and a few of his descendants bearing the Whitaker name are living in Massachusetts. Both Nathaniel Whitaker and his son Jonathan, then a student, are mentioned in the will of the sister and aunt, Mary White. Though not a native of Somerset, New Jersey, and never living there any great length of time, he still was bound by many ties to that section. He was a frequent visitor, well known to many of the people of Somerset and is worthy of being remembered as one of the active and forceful men of his day. In the publications of the Colonial Society of Massachusetts, Volume XIII, page 42 we find the names and ages of the children of the Reverend Mr Nathaniel Whitaker and his wife Sarah, of Norwich; James born 25 Oct. 1756; - Elifabeth born 12 July, 1758, - these two born in New Jersey; Sarah born 21 March 1761; Mary born 27 March 1764. His son Jonathan made his home at Sharon and New Bedford, Mass., and later at Helmetta, N.Y. He was a Congregational Minister and later a Unitarian.

Nathaniel Whitaker married Sarah Smith of Woodbridge, New Jersey, and they had the following children:

No.24 James Whitaker
25 Elizabeth Whitaker
26 Sarah Whitaker
27 Mary Whitaker
28 William Smith Whitaker
29 Jonathan Whitaker
30 Nathaniel Whitaker

In Caulkins' History of Norwich, Conn. we learn that the Sixth Society, Norwich, was organized 29 November 1751, with Captain Jabez Dean as Moderator. The records 30 June 1759 read:

> "At a Society Meeting it was voted to give Rev. Nathaniel Whitaker a call to settle in the work of the Gospel Ministry provided he shall be regularly dismissed from his present charge, and provided he and those who shall form themselves into a Church shall agree in matters of Faith and Practice."

Mr Whitaker decided to accept the call. The salary was fixed at one hundred pounds per annum. Mr Whitaker arrived with his family and goods by water 12 April 1760. A room for preaching had been prepared in the Tavern kept by Samuel Trapp, and a bell to take the place of the Sabbath drum was suspended in the rear of the house from a scaffolding erected upon a rock.

SOCIETY EXPENDITURES.

January 1761. To pay the freight of Mr Whitaker's family & goods from ye Jersies to this place in April last, 12 pounds.

In organising the Church some difficulties occurred. As a natural consequence of his antecedent connections Mr Whitaker was attached to the Presbyterian polity and urged its adoption. The articles drawn up by him were thoroughly Presbyterian, agreeing with those of the Church of Scotland. After many endeavors the Church was formed by signing a covenant 24 July 1760. Mr Whitaker was installed 25 February 1761. No Church at this period had been built, and the installation services were held under the wide canopy of the heavens. Some passages out of Dr Lord's sermon were omitted out of compassion to the audience exposed to the wintry air "in the open field." A Church was built 1766, the basement being let out for commercial purposes. Pew No.1 was reserved for the Minister and his family. There were 33 pews in all. The bell was hung on a limb of a large tree near the door. On completion of the Church a portion of Mr Whitaker's congregation became dis-satisfied with his Ministry. They accused him of stepping aside from his duty as Clergyman to engage in trade, and in this line, of having attempted to monopolise the vending of wine, raisins, etc in the Society. A Council was called but no decision come to. While the matter was still agitated the Connecticut Board of Correspondence for Indian affairs nominated Mr Whitaker to accompany Occom, the Mohegan preacher, on a mission to Europe to solicit benefactions for the endowment of "Moors Indian Charity School" at Lebanon. When this project was laid before the Society they refused their consent to Mr Whitaker's acceptance. Another meeting - same result. Six members, Nathaniel Haskus, Jr and Sr, Ephriam Bill, Prosper Wetmore, Peter Lanman and William Coit were bent on compelling him to relinquish the pastorate. Two advisory Councils were called and it was at length proposed that Mr Whitaker should be allowed to accept without dissolving his relation to the Church, but that he should relinquish his salary while absent; his people to have the privilege of selecting another Minister before his return if they chose, and if such an event took place, he was to be considered as dismissed. If he should return before the settlement of another Minister a Council was to be convened to decide whether he should continue with them or be dismissed. This conciliatory proposition which emanated from Dr Lord of the First Society was accepted on 9 January 1766; the Agreement was signed by all 23 members.

Mr Whitaker was a man of fine talents and prepossessing appearance. He had manifested great interest in the property of Mr Wheelock's Indian School at Lebanon and in the welfare of the Mohegan Indians - his neighbors. On these accounts he had been selected to accompany Occum. They carried with them a printed book containing recommendations.

Mr Whitaker's recommendation from his Church is as follows:

"The Church of Christ at Chelsey in Norwich Connecticut in New England:

To all the Churches of Christ, and Whomsoever it May Concern, Sent Greeting:

Whereas it has pleased God in his Providence to call our Reverend and Worthy Pastor Mr Nathaniel Whitaker from us for a Season to go to Europe to solicit Charities for the Indian Charity School..... We do unanimously recommend him, the said Mr Whitaker and his services to all the Churches and People of God of whatsoever denomination and wheresoever he may come as a Faithful Minister of Jesus Christ... earnestly requesting brotherly kindness and charity may be extended towards him as occasion may require. Yours in the Faith and Fellowship of the Gospel

Norwich 21 Oct 1766

The delegates were eminently successful in their mission. Some disagreement arose between Mr Whitaker and his Indian Associate before they left England and the latter in confidential correspondence threw out hints that were calculated to excite suspicions of Mr Whitaker's integrity. This distrust was undoubtedly without cause. The most inflexible of Mr Whitaker's opponents at Chelsea never questioned his integrity and the majority of his congregation adhered to him with strong and unwavering trust.

Mr Whitaker's salary was recommenced 2 June 1768, which was doubtless the day of his return to Norwich and resumption of his pastoral duties. A Society meeting was held to determine if they would call a Council of dismission as agreed before his departure and the majority decided in the negative. Very soon however the old grievances recurred and at a Society meeting 3 January 1769 it was put to vote:

"Whether ye Society will agree with Rev. Nathaniel Whitaker, D. D. and ye aggrandizements aggrieved members of the Society in calling ye Council agreed upon 6 November 1765 to convene at this place on ye 24th inst."..... "Resolved in ye affirmative."

Before this Council the Church laid the charges brought by Mr Whitaker against the six aggrieved members, and the Council after consideration advised dismission. This result Mr Whitaker laid before the Church and Society respectively, and after enumerating the embarrassments that threatened his future usefulness, requested to be released from his pastoral office. Both assemblies were reluctant and voted against his dismission, the Church unanimously and the Society 28 to 9.

It was agreed however at Mr Whitaker's request that another Council should be called with the express understanding that all parties would yield to its decision. This Council also advised dimission, and accordingly the same day Mr Whitaker was dismissed, the Church recording their unwilling consent in these terms:

24 March 1769 - "Voted that the Church have always been and still are averse to a dimission of Rev. Dr. Whitaker, as they do not see any sufficient reason for it, and earnestly desire his continuance, and by no means desire to be understood to have the least hand in his removal; yet they consent to the same and will submit to the results of the Council."

Mr Whitaker was no common place character. He had great quickness and force of mind. The order of his temperament and his ceaseless activity may some times have drawn him aside from his Ministerial functions, or led him to take a position slightly antagonistic and controversial, but he had noble traits of character. His name is honorably connected with the foundation of Dartmouth College, and the degree of D. D. conferred upon him by the College in New Jersey shows that his ability and enterprise were appreciated by his contemporaries. He was subsequently installed at Salem, Massachusetts, and at Norridgewock, Maine, being dismissed from the latter place. In 1790 he went to Virginia and there died.

Mr Whitaker brought with him to Norwich his wife Sarah and two young children, as before stated. He had two daughters, Sarah and Mary born in Norwich.

Mr Whitaker's publications amount to some 8 or 10 pamphlets consisting of occasional sermons and treats on passing events of a theological type. Perhaps the earliest of these publications is "The Trial of the Spirits," a sermon on I John IV - 1, preached at Newent in Norwich 17 March 1762 and published at the Desire of Those who Heard it. SALEM, MASSACHUSETTS BEFORE THE REVOLUTION.
(By Gilbert L. Streeter)

A notice of the Clergy would be very incomplete if it did not give a prominent place to the Re . Nathaniel Whitaker, D. D., pastor of the Church since known as the Tabernacle Church. He was one of the notabilities of the town, eminent by his talents and ability, influential through his zeal and activity, troublesome as a disputant and controversialist. He preached here 15 years during which time he was almost constantly engaged in some war of words upon some exciting topic. He was one of those uneasy spirits who prefer to live in the storm rather than in the sunshine. He engaged with the fervor of a zealot in all the current disputes of the day and was by turns the foremost champion if a scheme of Theology, a party in politics and a school in medicine. He was a pillar of Presbyterianism and a standard bearer of Colonial Rebellion. He sustained a protracted and violent controversy with members of his own society throughout his Ministry upon the merits of the Presbyterian Church polity, a controversy ending finally in his expulsion from the pulpit. In 1774 he entered warmly into the controversy concerning the comparative merits of the American and English systems of inoculation for the small pox, a controversy which raged in Salem in print and speech almost as injuriously as the disease itself. He even entered the field and practiced and inoculated in Salem and the neighboring towns, on the American plan.

Dr Whitaker was an ardent and impassioned advocate of the Revolution and both gave and took many of the hard blows which were then exchanged. The late Benson Punchard, who knew Whitaker well, described him as:

> "A man of uncommon intellectual Powers - of extensive erudition - orthodox in sentiment - a distinguished preacher - of dignified personal appearance; and especially of consummate skill and tact in accomplishing his own purposes."

He had preached in England before distinguished hearers and had been complimented by the Countess of Huntington, who was a Disciple of Whitefield. His meeting house was on Main Street (Essex) not far above School Street (Washington) and was called the Huntington Chapel. He came to Salem with a great reputation for learning, eloquence and piety. He possessed the odor of sanctity. He got himself installed without the aid of any other Clergyman, beguiling his Society as they afterward said "with fair words and goodly speeches." Timothy Pickering, Jr. performed the services. The neighboring Clergy protested but his Society increased and flourished until it became the largest in town..... He had early entered into the cares of the temporal as well as the spiritual kingdom. He became interested in the worldly affairs of the town to an extent that prejudiced his reputation as a Minister. There were rumors affecting his moral character and finally Timothy Pickering, Jr. deserted him and administered some left hand blows which were more than he could take and live. In 1774 a portion of his Society withdrew. During the same year the Meeting House was destroyed by the "Great Fire." But still undaunted the Reverend Doctor raised the means to erect a new house which he called the Tabernacle after his friend Whitfield's Tabernacle in London, of which it was a copy. While the Tabernacle was building the War of the Revolution came on. Dr Whitaker entered into this with all his heart. He urged on the cause in the most ardent manner and the most pungent style. This delighted the Whigs and exasperated the Tories.

At the commencement of hostilities he preached a famous sermon from the following text:

> "Curse ye Meroz said the Angel of the Lord; Curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof because they came not to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

The belligerant Doctor applied this curse to the Tories and from the fullness of his hear did curse them bitterly. At the close of the war he preached a companion to this sermon and the two papers were published and dedicated to General Washington under the title:

> "An antidote against, and the reward of toryism."

A second edition was published as late as 1811 at the Salem REGISTER office. Judge Samuel Curwen of Salem, a loyalist refugee in London wrote to a friend that Whitaker was:

> "A notorious character in America and not unknown here..... He is usually called Dr Meroz in America from his usually applying the 23rd verse of the 5th chapter of Judges to the poor refugees."

Again he refers to Dr Whitaker as:

> "A mischievous incendiary of a proud, restless turbulent spirit."

William Pynchon, a Salem Lawyer wrote of Whitaker and one Alcock as:

> "the authors and promoters of more mischief than it it is possible that any two others could or would effect or even attempt. They resembled Swift's Committee of Ways and Means for continuing the war and promoting malevolence and contention as long as possible."

These passages exhibit the bitterness felt by the tories toward Dr Whitaker as an advocate of the patriotic movement. Besides preaching Dr Whitaker also practised in favor of the revolution by entering into the privateering business in which it is said he was pretty fortunate and frequently "turned an honest penny." He also engaged in the manufacture of saltpetre and salt, his works having been located, as Mr Felt informs us, near the head of Essex Street. The town voted to give Dr Whitaker leave to erect such works on the common. In his sermon on Toryism he mentions that several gentlemen subscribed $500.00 in the aid of these enterprises, and there are records of the sale of saltpetre to the State by Dr Whitaker and his associates.

But these various activities finally involved Dr Whitaker into many troubles that in connection with his alleged moral shortcomings and his Presbyterian heresy, they proved his ruin. The number of attendants on his ministry diminished, amounting in fact to a general flight. An ex-parte ecclesiastical Council found that his ministerial walk had been and still was irregular, his deportment overbearing and tyrannical, his moral character very suspicious and his Presbyterian heresy very obstinate. Therefore he was deposed from office in disgrace. This was in 1784.

The Doctor made a stout defence and maintained that the charges against him were calumnious and libellous, and upon an appeal to the Presbytery he exerted sufficient influence upon that body to secure an exoneration from the charges against him. After Dr Whitaker left town his career was varied and questionable, and his conduct was marked by the same characteristics that enlivened it in Salem.....

Ibid. P. 72 -

The leader of the Whigs or patriotic party was unquestionably Timothy Pickering, Jr..... but the popular leader who swayed and controlled the "common people" was the pulpit Demosthenes; the impetuous, persistent and implacable friend of liberty, the Reverend Nathaniel Whitaker of the Huntington Chapel; afterward the Tabernacle Church. This redoubtable champion began as early as the Boston massacre, if not before, to preach red hot sermons which excited and strengthened the hatred of the Tories. He was in accord with the most extreme views and purposes of the period.

No.42 SARAH (SALLY) WHITAKER.

Was born 8 September 1792; died August 1863. She married Garret Voorhees. No attempt will be made to carry this line out here, as it is covered in detail in various Genealogies. Reference is made to the Van Voorhees Genealogy, published in 1888 by Elias W. Van Voorhis; also to a condensed publication of same by the Van Voorhees Assn.; also to the book "Ralph and Elizabeth Reiman Voorhees, A Tribute," by Oscar E. Voorhees, D.D.,LL.D., Secretary of the united chapters of Phi Beta Kappa; also to the Historical Handbook of the Van Voorhees family. However it is fitting that a brief summary be appended:

By the purchase in 1795, Nathaniel Whitaker became the fourth owner of the Whitaker Mine Brook Estate, which he later enlarged by the purchase of about 100 acres. On his death in 1841 he left the farm to his eldest daughter SARAH WHITAKER. Sarah married in 1816 one Garret Voorhees of Middlebush, whose ancestry was exclusively Dutch. He was a descendant of the immigrant Steven Coerte Van Voorhees, through Lucas, Minne, Garret and Garret Junior; hence the sixth generation from the land of dykes and ditches. This marriage was typical of that union of Dutch and English lines that came to be customary during the 19th century. Through it the Whitaker blood is perpetuated in Somerset County, New Jersey, so far as known by the present generation.

At his marriage Garret Voorhees moved to Mine Brook and spent the remainder of his days on the Whitaker Estate. Sarah (Whitaker) Voorhees died, and with her death the family connection in Somerset County ended. Garret Voorhees died in 1870. They had 11 children, all of whom grew to maturity and married, but all of them have now passed on. Of them we will write briefly:

John Voorhees, the eldest, spent his days in Somerset, living first at Mine Brook and later at South Branch. His son, Edward B. Voorhees was well known throughout the State as Professor of Agriculture at Rutgers and Director of the State and United States Agricultural Experiment Station. He was one of the worthy sons of Somerset and his death in 1911 was sincerely regretted by a wide circle of friends and admirers. Other children of John Voorhees are living, but not in Somerset County, New Jersey.

Ann Voorhees married William Heath of Bernard's Township and they lived all their married life in Bedminster. One son, John Heath, resided in Somerville.

Hannah Voorhees married first John Fulmley who lived on the Mine farm between Somerville and Pluckemin. Two sons are living in Illinois, one, David, being President of the Illinois State Normal University at Normal. She married secondly Benjamin Shoemaker, who lived for a time at Mt Pleasant on the farm formerly owned by John C. Shaw. They removed to Illinois and she outlived all her brothers and sisters. Her death occurred July 12, 1908.

Garret Voorhees IV lived at Rocky Hill. One son, William B. Voorhees lived with his family at Middlebush.

Nathaniel Whitaker Voorhees was graduated from Rutgers in 1847 and spent the remainder of his life in Clinton, Hunterdon County, New Jersey. He was for a term Judge of the County Court. For a few years he served as Secretary of the State Senate, and on one occasion became a candidate for Congress on the Republican ticket in the old fourth district. He was a member of the convention that nominated Lincoln and Garfield for the Presidency. His son, Hon. Foster M. Voorhees of Elizabeth was for eight years a member of the Legislature and in 1899 was elected Governor of New Jersey. Other children of Nathaniel Whitaker Voorhees are living in Hunterdon.

Samuel S. Voorhees after the death of his mother purchased the Homestead and resided on it until 1902, when he sold it to Mr. William H. Page, the present owner. His widow and three children lived at Basking Ridge. Three other children live beyond the bounds of the County, Rev. Oscar M. Voorhees, D.D., of New York City being one of them.

The younger daughters, Mary Voorhees and Ruth Voorhees married Somerset County men, but spent their married lives; the former in New York City and the latter in Brooklyn, N.Y.

The youngest son, Ralph Voorhees, remained on the farm until he became blind at about 25 years of age. He continued to live there with his brother Samuel until 1887 when he married Elizabeth Rolman, daughter of the late John Rolman of Bedminster. They made their home in Clinton, N.J., and attained wide esteem for their benefactions to Churches and Colleges. Mr Voorhees was often spoken of as the Blind Philanthropist At the time of their marriage Mr and Mrs Voorhees were in middle life. More than a dozen buildings bear the Voorhees name in as many colleges in the United States, and one in India. From an inheritance of less than $1,500,000 they were able through a period of thirty years to dispense about $5,000,000. Among the institutions aided by them were:

Carroll College, Waukesha, Wis. Four buildings.
Huron College, Huron, S.D. Main Hall and Dormitory.
Maryville College, Maryville, Tenn. Chapel.
The Elizabeth R. Voorhees College, Vellore, India. Main Recitation Hall.
Jamestown College, Jamestown, N.D. Chapel and Music Hall.
Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N.J. Library.
Hope College, Holland Mich. Dormitory for Women.
Coe College, Cedard Rapids, Iowa, the Voorhees Quadrangle.
Voorhees Institute, Denmark, S.C. Five buildings.
American Indian Institute, Wichita, Kan. Dormitory.
New Jersey College for Women, New Brunswick, N.J. Chapel and organ.
Large gifts to the Y.M.C.A. at Perth Amboy, N.J. and to the new Hospital at Somerville.

The Voorhees name is borne by two schools in American, one in South Carolina and one in California; by a College in India. There are also the Voorhees State Park at High Bridge, N. J., and the Voorhees Colonnade at Denver, Colorado. The Van Voorhees Association (membership 1935 now about 400) in a prospectus states: "Mr. Voorhees bore a Dutch name, but his mother, SARAH WHITAKER was of English descent.

Thus it is seen that the descendants of SARAH WHITAKER bearing the Voorhees name are widely scattered, though a number of them still reside in Somerset County, New Jersey. They are men and women of good character and are held in high esteem in the various communities where they reside and a few have attained considerable prominence. All are interested in their WHITAKER ancestry.

While Abraham Whitaker of Los Angeles stated before his death that Stephen Whitaker (his grandfather) married Sarah Skinner, documentary evidence is to the contrary. It will be noted that William Whitaker married Sarah Skinner. In a History of Clermont County, Ohio, published in 1882 it states in an item concerning Monterey that the Presbyterian Church was organized in 1859, and that among the charter members were W.S. Whitaker, and HULDAH WHITAKER, wife of STEPHEN; the latter being one of the Trustees. J.H. (Harve) built the first blacksmith shop in Monterey in 1852 and had a cooper shop in 1847. The History also states that in 1798 John Whitaker of North Carolina came to Clermont County and selected a fine tract of land near Williamsville. He returned to North Carolina to get his family but died. His widow and her family did not come until 1807. There were seven sons in this John Whitaker's family, as follows:

a Joshua Whitaker
b Thomas Whitaker
c John Whitaker
d Henry Whitaker
e Mark Whitaker
f William Whitaker
g Israel Whitaker

Israel Whitaker became prominent in the County and was living in Amelia in 1882, aged 89 years, and was a Judge. A Margaret Whitaker was a land holder in Batavia Township.

Stephen Whitaker, his wife, and others related are buried in an old cemetery near Monterey, Ohio. Stephen Whitaker died at Abraham Whitaker's in Newtonsville, Ohio. Newtonsville is situated on the Logtown and Newtonsville free turnpike, three miles southeast of the former place. It was laid out March 30, 1833 by Stephen Whitaker and Cornelius Washburn and contained 32 lots. In 1870 Abraham Whitaker built a wagon shop on Vine Street.

No.74 JONATHAN WHITAKER.

Was born 24 January 1780 and died 17 April 1856. He married Mary Bailey, daughter of Thaddeus Bailey of Sussex County, N.J., and moved to Yates County New York. He was an elder and efficient member of the Presbyterian Church at Benton, New York. He was drafted for the war of 1812 but sent a substitute. His wife Mary Bailey was born 27 August 1784.

Jonathan Whitaker inherited his father's virtues and his religious tendencies and was a citizen of true worth. He was a young man when the family came from New Jersey to New York and participated in the arduous labors of pioneer life, working out by the month, clearing land and putting forth every energy of his life to secure by industry a competence and honorable independence in the land. With but six months of early schooling he was yet well educated for the practical affairs of his day, ready in computation, able to write a good hand and a competent business man. He married in 1806, and he and his wife united with the Presbyterian Church of Benton, N.Y. in 1825. He was soon made an elder of the Church and honored the office over 30 years and until his death in 1856 at the age of 76. His name was identified with all the religious and benevolent movements of his time, and he was a man whose life was squared by his principles. He was frequently elected to offices in his town and was supervisor several times. The implicit trust of his fellow men in his integrity led him often to be chosen as arbitor, referee and administrator, the duties of which positions he always discharged with fidelity. Of his iron muscles and unyielding energy it is related that when the nearest wheat market was at Bath Creek, he set out on one occasion with 40 bushels on a sled drawn by two yoke of oxen. The day proved warm, the sled sunk in the snow and the oxen became so tired and discouraged that at the foot of a hill they would not draw at all, so he would carry most of his load up the hill on his shoulder before his oxen would move. This he was obliged to repeat several times and when he reached the mill where he disposed of his grain, he had to carry it again up two flights of stairs to empty it.

after all this he received the meager pittance of 25¢ a bu. for his wheat. Late in his life there was an attempt made to rob his house. A villain wearing a mask entered the bed room where the aged couple were sleeping while a confederate stood at the door. The robber lighted a candle which awakened Mrs Whitaker and a scream from her awakened her husband who asked the intruder what he wanted. He replied "money" and held a pistol in his hand to enforce his demand. In getting up as if to comply, the room being narrow, the robber was backed up to the doorway, where he stood a pistol in one hand and a candle in the other. By a sudden movement Mr Whitaker pushed the door against him and shut it, upon which the two inside held it against the two outside to crowd it open. The enraged and baffled burglar threatened to shoot and when he found his threats ineffective, did shoot, the bullet passing through the door between the pair inside. The noise aroused others of the household and the assailants soon deemed it wise to decamp. It is said that Mrs Whitaker never recovered from the shock caused by the attempted robbery and that her life was shortened by it. She died in 1854 on her 71st birthday. Their children were:

Daniel Kimball Whitaker, American Editor, b Charon, Conn. 13 April 1801, died 10 April 1861. He was graduated at Harvard in 1820, studied law and settled in South Carolina, becoming law partner of ex-Governor John Lyde Wilson. Though eminently successful as a lawyer his preferences were for literature and he established and edited a number of periodicals, among them the Southern Literary Journal and Whitaker's Magazine. In 1841 he established at Charlestown, South Carolina, the Southern Quarterly Review, which he edited until the Civil War. In 1856 he moved to New Orleans and founded and for many years edited the New Orleans Monthly Review. He was Corresponding Secretary of the New Orleans Academy of Sciences.

Miss Fanny Louise Whitaker, Los Angeles, states:

Professor Daniel Kimball Whitaker was the second son of the Reverend Jonathan Whitaker and Mary Kimball, his wife. Professor Daniel Whitaker wrote, but never published, a life of his grand father, and may naturally have been in possession of any relics left by that interesting and notable man. Professor Daniel himself is described to us as a thorough gentleman and a brilliant scholar. THE DESCENDANTS OF THOMAS MARION WHITAKER.

This record is in no wise complete, and probably has errors a plenty, but it has been impossible to get replies from any of families whose records are meager. They cannot be cajoled or threatened into answering letters giving vital statistics. What is know of these familes is made up of scraps of information of their relatives. However, these lines are brought down to date, and with exactness where it was possible. As all States now require the filing of vital statistics, it will be a simple matter for anyone in 25, 50 or 100 years to take up the thread of descendants where this leaves off, and accurately follow the lines out, based on civil records.

No.190 THOMAS MANTON WHITAKER.
Married Sarah Needham. Their children were:

No.538 Joseph Whitaker, born 16 November 1846
539 Abraham Whitaker, born 18 March 1847
540 Martha Jane Whitaker, born 9 January 1849
541 Abigail Whitaker, born 23 October 1851
542 John Whitaker, born 15 August 1854
543 Sarah Whitaker, born 23 January 1857

Sarah (Needham) Whitaker died near Newtonville, Ohio, about 1858 and is buried in the old brick chapel church yard.

Thomas Manton Whitaker married secondly to Mrs Matilda Williams, a widow. Her former husband was George Williams, by whom she had three children. She was born 6 July 1825. Nothing more is known of her - not even her maiden name. She married Thomas Manton Whitaker in Clermont County, Ohio about 1859, and she died at Monroe, Ohio 18 January 1917, being almost 92 years of age. She is buried in Monroe, Ohio. Thomas Manton Whitaker died at Newtonsville, Ohio 18 January 1893. Such is the record furnished, but it seems strange to find them both dying on the same day in January 24 years apart. They had the following children:

No.544 Lucinda Whitaker, born 22 April 1860
545 Tabitha Whitaker, born 25 January 1862 near Newtonville, O.
546 Warren Whitaker ?
547 Homer Whitaker, born 31 December 1866
548 Lowell Whitaker, born 17 April ?

All of Thomas Manton Whitaker's children were born on grandfather Needham's farm near Newtonsville, Ohio, and Georgetown, Ohio (now called Modest). The farm is about half way between. No one seems to know where the old Whitaker Bible is, and it is too bad we do not have the exact dates of the births of Warren and Lowell. It might be found among the Needham or Williams descendants, or records in the latter families' Bibles.

LETTERS OF FRANKLIN A. BUCK.
Compiled by Katherine A. White, and published under the title of " A YANKEE TRADER IN THE GOLD RUSH."

Page 242. Letter dated Pioche, Nevada January 21, 1872.

"We have had an interesting day. Have been to Church twice and intend going again. Last evening we, the building committee, met and received the building from the contractor, settled all the bills and had thirteen dollars left. Our Church cost 3764 dollars.
Today Bishop Whitaker consecrated it, assisted by Mr Kelly of Hamilton, and Mr Badger.....The ceremonies of consecration of the Episcopal Church are similar to the orthodox, except that we donate the Church to the Bishop for the sole use of the Episcopal Church in a lengthy document, which was read..... The singing was very good and Bishop Whitaker preached an excellent sermon. He is really a fine preacher and a very popular man in Nevada....."

Page 248. Letter dated Pioche, Nevada August 16, 1874.

"We had Bishop Whitaker to preach today. He visits us once a year and the Church is filled full once a year at least. He is a first class preacher and one of the most courteous, Christian gentlemen that ever I have met. He came immediately to see Arthur (Buck's son who had had an accident) and has called twice. I discussed the Beecher case (Henry Ward Beecher was sued the following year & January 1875 - by Theodore Tilton for the alienation of the affections of his wife, Elizabeth Tilton. Adultery was charged. The jury never agreed on a verdict) with the Bishop. He does not believe B. quite criminal, but says ever since B. officiated at the Richardson and McFarlane marriage he thinks he had a low estimate of the marriage relations....."

ABRAHAM WHITAKER CELEBRATES 86th BIRTHDAY.

The central figure in a happy group of relatives, Abraham Whitaker celebrated his 86th birthday Saturday, March 17, at his home 2223 Griffin Avenue. The honoree at the dinner party has five children, and all were present with one exception. The children who, with their families, made the birthday event a memorable occasion were Mrs W. H. Shaw, Mrs H. H. West, Forrest M. Whitaker, O. C. Whitaker and Mrs Guy Whitaker. One son, Guy Whitaker, is away on a business trip in Ohio. Several intimate friends were included with the relatives so there were twenty in all to felicitate Mr Whitaker on his good health at his advanced age. A lovely birthday cake and floral decorations added a festive touch to the cheery party. Mr Whitaker came from Ohio to Lincoln Heights 47 years ago. Here his children grew to maturity and were married. The father was a valued Southern Pacific employee, until he retired from active service many years ago. During his long residence here, he has witnessed vast changes and improvements. He has made a large number of friends, of whom the older ones have nearly all passed to their long rest. Yet the aged resident takes a keen interest in current events. He reads without glasses; hears fairly well, and keeps well posted on general information. One of Mr Whitaker's greatest delights is any occasion where his children and grandchildren are assembled for a social visit with him. He has lived a clean life. He believes in moderation in all things. Those who know him best declare that the secret of his longlivety is the fact that he knows what to eat and when to go to bed.

The Bulletin-News congratulates Mr Whitaker on his birthday, and wishes him continued good health.

WHITAKER'S STATION.

Sometimes known as the "RED ORCHARD," was founded by the Reverend John Whitaker on a spot that the late John T. Ballard said was many times pointed out to him by Colonel James Whitaker, son of the founder and was built just south of the town of Shelbyville, on what was long known as the Carrither's farm, across Clear Creek from Shelbyville, and not far east of Zoring's Mill.

It was told of the wife of the Reverend Whitaker, the founder of the station, that she was as expert as her husband with the rifle, and killed not one, but several Indians with the weapon she carried, and with which she guarded the field while her husband plowed the corn.

Reverend Whitaker had early planted an orchard, which produced what was then an unheard of generous crop of great red apples, and it was from these that the other name of "RED ORCHARD" came to be used.

SOME EXTRACTS FROM "STORY OF A NEW JERSEY LAND TITLE."

Being an Account of the Chain of Events by which lands along the Mine Brook in Somerset County purchased in 1752 of the Heirs of William Penn by Jonathan Whitaker became the property of Blanche and William H. Page in 1902.
Written in 1907 by Oscar H. Voorhees.

The history of Land Titles in New Jersey is peculiar. This results from the fact that in the early days of its history, this was not a Crown, but a Proprietary Colony. While the Proprietors in 1701 surrendered their rights of government to the crown, they retained the ownership of the soil. Hence all titles come through them. On this point I quote from an address delivered by Hon. Courtlandt Parker at Perth Amboy November 25, 1884, at the Bi-Centennial celebration of the Board of Proprietors. He says:

"The existence of a separate Board or Council of Proprietors from whom all titles are derived, instead of obtaining them from the governing power, as is the case, I believe, in all other States of the Union, is a fact which, well understood among native Jerseymen, almost always seems strange to those who are not."

While by reason of the voyages of the Cabots in 1497 and 1499 the English Crown claimed absolute title to the larger portion of North America, so far as the territory now known as New Jersey is concerned no attempt was made to enforce this claim until the year 1664. On March 12 of that year Charles II, by Royal Patent, transferred all this and much adjoining territory to his brother James, Duke of York, who afterwards succeeded him on the Throne. By reason of the successful expedition against the Dutch who had settled in New Amsterdam and a few contiguous sections, the claim of conquest was added to the claim of discovery. And these claims have never been successfully disputed. No Land in New Jersey is held by succession to the titles given during the Dutch occupancy. For the most part the land was an unappropriated wilderness. The doctrine of the English was that:

"To such property the law appoints the King as owner, because there is no other. Moreover it is a fundamental principle of the common law that all lands, even those of private persons, are held of the King. Where there is no private ownership, therefore, all persons must claim through him."

The deed of Charles to James stipulated a yearly return "of forty beaver skins when they shall be demanded or ninety days after."

Three months after receiving his deed, or to be exact, on 24 June 1664 James transferred to his loyal and worthy friends John Lord Berkeley and Sir George Carteret the land now included within the bounds of the State and also the right of government, the stipulation being a yearly payment of "twenty nobles lawful money of England."

By reason of the subsequent Dutch occupation, which was terminated by the treaty of 9 February 1674, Charles deemed it necessary to make a new transfer to James, and likewise James to Berkeley and Carteret to make the titles complete. These transfers were dated 29th July that year. Two years later the proprietors who had held the territory jointly divided it between them, Carteret taking the portion that afterwards became known as East New Jersey, and Berkeley's successors East New Jersey. For on 24 March 1673 Berkeley had sold to John Fenwick his share of New Jersey for one thousand pounds, and on 10 February and 11 1676 Fenwick transferred by a tripartite deed to Edward Billinge of the second part, and William Penn, Gawen Lawrie and Nicholas Lucas of the third part the portion he had received from Berkeley. This was followed by the famous quintipartite deed of division of 1 July 1676 by which Carteret and the four Quakers agree upon a straight line from Little Egg Harbour to a point on the Delaware at 41 degrees, 40 minutes north latitude as the line of partition that should divide East New Jersey from West New Jersey. It was stipulated that the north partition point on the Delaware should be the point originally designated as the western terminus of the line dividing New Jersey from New York. Had the partition line been drawn according to the exact terms of this deed it would have passed through Bedminster township about a mile west of Bedminster village, and all west of that line would have fallen to West Jersey. The line between New York and New Jersey was long in dispute and when the controversy respecting it was finally settled in 1775 a point on the Delaware at 41 degrees, 39 minutes and 22.56 seconds was accepted as the western terminus of the line of partition. Had the line dividing the Jerseys been drawn from Little Egg Harbour to this point it would have run to the west of Basking Ridge and of the Passaic River, and nearly all of Somerset County would have fallen to West Jersey. As a matter of fact neither of these solutions was accepted. It proved easier to locate the termini of the line on a map when drawing the deed than to survey that line through the wilderness. The first attempt at a survey was made by George Keith in 1687, and the straight line from Egg Harbour to the south branch of the Raritan near Three Bridges was the first fruits of his effort. A loud and bitter protest on the part of West Jersey proprietors was additional fruitage, for they saw that if that line were extended to the Delaware it would fall far south of the stipulated partition point and rob them of much valuable territory. Hence Keith deemed it wise to await further instructions before proceeding. As a matter of fact he never resumed his survey, though he succeeded in having his name attached to the line actually run, and the "Keith Line" it is to this day. The controversy was quieted for a time by an agreement concluded in London 5 September 1683 between Dr. Daniel Coxe and Robert Barclay, Governors respectively of West and East Jersey whereby the Keith line as far as run was accepted as the line of partition. From its termination on the South Branch a straight line was run in a northeasterly direction to the Lamington River. Thence the line was to follow that stream to its head, thence by a straight course running east to the Passaic, thence down that river to its junction with the Pequannock, thence up the Pequannock to a point in 41 degrees, 00 minutes north latitude, thence due east to the Hudson. It seems not to have been thought a mistake to accept this arrangement because of its conflict with the terms of the quintipartite deed which called for a straight line. But the strange thing about this line is that it terminated, not on the Delaware, but on the Hudson. However it was generally accepted and for the time being quieted the controversy.

A result of this agreement was to determine in large part the bounds of Somerset County, for the line agreed upon forms the entire western, the northern and nearly one third of the eastern boundary. Hence Somerset has always been in East Jersey, while Morris, situated to the east and north, was in West Jersey. Thus Somerset County was for a time, constructively at least, the property of Sir George Carteret. But he never knew the full extent of his possessions for he died 16 October 1680, eight years before the agreement above recited was effected. By his will he devised his New Jersey possessions among others to a number of Trustees for the benefit of his creditors. These Trustees sold East New Jersey at public sale to William Penn and eleven associates for 3400 pounds, their deeds of lease and release being dated February 1st and 2nd, 1681-82. Subsequently each of these associates sold one half of his respective right to a new associate making the number of proprietors twenty four. The following year the Duke of York confirmed this sale to the twenty four, and from this time until 1701, when the proprietors of both East and West Jersey surrendered their right of government to the Crown, they were in full control. Each had a twenty fourth interest in the property, inheritable, divisable and assignable as if it were a farm instead of a province. And by these means the estate has come down to those who now own the property. Every foot of ground in the State (East Jersey) has once belonged to these proprietors, and belongs to its present owner, as their successor, by and through the rules of common and statutory law.....

The records of the East New Jersey proprietors are found in their office in Perth Amboy, and there we must go to seek the original proprietary ownership of any particular piece of property in this division of the State. It should be added however that as a matter of honor and fairness to the Indians an effort was always made to secure title from them also. Though this Indian transfer was never allowed as a basis for full possession and for passing title to others it was deemed necessary to satisfy the Indians and free the title from possible taint. Hence we need to make a double search to clear up the history of any piece of property. In the history of Hunterdon and Somerset Counties it is stated, page 735, that "in 1701 the Governor and proprietors of East Jersey then residing in England being desirous of extinguishing the Indian title to lands and extending settlements in their province, appointed John Harrison agent for the purpose. He made large purchases from the Indians and their Chiefs in the Passaic Valley and among others about 3000 acres in what is now the Township of Bernards. . . . familiarly spoken of as 'Harrison's Neck.'" The deed for this land obtained from Nowenoik, an Indian Chief, bears date of 24 June 1717. The land thus purchased by Harrison forms the south-eastern portion of Bernards Township, Basking Ridge being situated near its northern extremity. It may very well be that as agent he secured the Indian title to the remaining portions of the Township, for I have found no other references to purchases of land from them in this section. Hence we shall take it for granted, in absence of evidence to the contrary, that the Indian title to the tract afterwards known as the Penn purchase was duly secured, and that this was well understood by subsequent purchasers. The first individual owner of the land afterwards known as the Whitaker tract or Whitaker tracts was William Penn. In June 1717 by order of James Alexander his attorney, he had surveyed for him a large tract of 7500 acres situated to the north and west of Harrison's Neck, "in Right of said Penn's second and addition to the second dividend of said Penn's propriety in East New Jersey."

The description of this tract, recorded in the office in Perth Amboy, in Book of Surveys, No. 1, is not particularly specific, but by means of an accompanying map the general outlines of the tract may be readily understood. The eastern boundary was the Passaic and Harrison's Neck, from which it was separated by Penn's Brook and the north branch of the Dead River; the southern, was a line running east and west to the south of the said river; the western, a line running due north that crossed the Mine Brook a little to the west of the present railroad bridge that spans that stream on lands of J.M.Dillon, and crossed the public road not far from the large chestnut tree that stands just west of the residence of Mr. Page; while the northern boundary was an irregular line partly north and partly south of the Mine Brook, the eastern portion extending in a northeasterly direction until it touches the Passaic not far from the present location of Hon.S.S.Childs "Old Army Road." The portion of the line that particularly interests us now is the northern portion of the western boundary line that was to run due north, for that was the western boundary of the two tracts purchased in 1752 by Jonathan Whitaker, of Thomas and Richard Penn, the surviving sons and heirs of their father, William Penn. The deed or indenture by which these tracts were transferred to Jonathan Whitaker is still in existence. . . . Without doubt every purchaser of any portion of the Penn tract received a similar document, but I know of none other in existence. The parchment is 26 x 29 inches, and there are fifty four lines of writing, containing about thirty five words each, making in all nearly two thousand words. The length of this production is due in part to the recital of the appointment by Thomas and Richard Penn of Richard Peters and Linford Lardner of Philadelphia, Esquires, as attorneys and agents of them, the said Thomas Penn and Richard Penn, with instructions to sell any and all of their lands in both the divisions of New Jersey, which appointment is asserted and reiterated with a marked fullness of detail. Then follows the description of the tracts, the first or northern one containing 285 acres; the second, situated to the south of the first containing 122½ acres, which had formerly been in the possession of Richard Lucas. Thus the two tracts contained 407½ acres, and the price paid was 255 pounds lawful money of New Jersey, i. e., at the rate of 12 shillings, 6 pence, per acre. The first tract is said to contain a "messuage, saw mill, buildings and other improvements." Nothing is specified respecting the improvements on the other tract, though that there were such is implied by the general terms covering both tracts, which are as follows:

> "Together with all Houses Outhouses Edifices Buildings Yard Orchards Gardens Weare Dams Streams Races Woods Underwoods Timber and Trees Ways Waters Water-courses Mines Minerals Easements Profits Comodities Advantages Emoluments Improvements Hereditaments and Appertances Whatsoever unto the said hereby described tracts of lands belonging or in any wise appertaining and also the Reversion and Reversions Remainder and Remainders Rents Issues and Profits thereof and all the Estate Right title possession Claim and Demand whatsoever as well as in Equity as in Law of them the said Thomas Penn and Richard Penn or of any or either of them of in and to the said several described tracts and parcels of land and premises and of in and to any part or parcel thereof with the appurtenances to HAVE AND TO HOLD the said two several hereinbefore described tracts or parcels of Land, Hereditaments and premises hereby granted and Released or meant mentioned or intended to be hereby Granted or released and every part or parcel thereof with the appurtenances unto the said JONATHAN WHITAKER his heirs and

THOMAS PENN — Richard Peters

RICHARD PENN — Lynford Lardner

The Mark of
Robert R. Moor

Ralph Smith. "

On the back of the parchment is the following attestation by James Alexander who was then Surveyor General of both East and West Jersey, and the father of William Alexander, who is known in Colonial history as the Earl of Stirling.-

"Be it remembered that on this twenty sixth day of March one thousand seven hundred and fifty three Ralph Smith one of the witnesses to this deed appeared before James Alexander one of his majesty's counsil for New Jersey and being duly sworn on the holy Evangelists on his oath Declared that he saw Richard Peters and Lynford Lardner Seal and Deliver the within Deed as the act and Deed of Thomas Penn and Richard Penn for the uses therein mentioned.

(Signed) JAS. ALEXANDER."

It is unnecessary to comment on the extraordinary verbosity and prolixity of this deed. It is evident that it was the purpose to make Jonathan Whitaker's title to the land purchased clear and freee from taint. It is equally evident that the scpyists were determined to make their charges as large as possible. But think of the weariness of doing that thing by the week as would be necessary when many titles were to be copied. We have only need to observe that the entire Penn tract is said to be located at Baskenridge, which indicates that that was the name by which the entire region was designated. That portion of Somerset County was not formed into a Township and called Bernard until 24 May 1764.

JONATHAN WHITAKER it is believed was born in Wiltshire, England, in 1690 and came to America in 1720. He first made his home in Sharon, Massachusetts. Tradition says he was a member of the House of Lords and came to America on account of religious persecution. It is known that the Whitaker or Wheatmore family in England is a very old one dating from 1100 or thereabout. Several men of the name became prominent in England during the 16th and 17th centuries as clergymen, authors and educators.

It is evident that several members of the Whitaker family came to America, but the relationship of the various immigrants has not been carefully traced. It may well be that some of Jonathan Whitaker's relatives were of the nobility but it is not likely that he had strong claims to a seat among the Lords..... Jonathan Whitaker purchased land at Huntington (L.I.) in 1729 of Ephenetus Platt, and in 1739 he purchased land west of Elizabeth, N. J., and it is presumed that he lived there until shortly before the purchase at Mine Brook in 1752, at which time he was 62 years of age. We have no positive knowledge of the chain of events by which he was led to this section, but a possible determining factor was the marriage of his eldest daughter Elizabeth Whitaker to Stephen Ogden of Basking Ridge. It is quite probable that he had found a home near, or perhaps with his daughter before the purchase, for in the deed he is called "Jonathan Whitaker of Baskenridge."

(If he is called Jonathan Whitaker of Baskenridge in the deed in 1752, then the name Basking Ridge never was given to the place on account of General Washington's Cavalry Basking in the sun there, as stated elsewhere in this Record.....H.H.E.)

No contemporary record sets forth the condition of the property at that time, but we know in general that the country was largely covered with forests; the clearings were small and separated by long distances, and the houses and other buildings were for the most part of a rude and temporary character. However there was a road running through the valley if indeed the rude trail could be called a road, and here and there a plantation had been located along it. The original house was located not far from the site on which the "Dilley" house now stands. All traces of it have disappeared and it is hardly possible that there is any one living who recalls it. It would be interesting to know if there were a house or houses on the land at the time of the purchase, or whether these had to be constructed before the property could be actually occupied. The use of the term "messuage" would indicate that there was a house on the larger tract, and we are justified in the conclusion, I think, that there was a house on the second tract also, for that had been in the possession of Richard Lucas, and soon thereafter we find that it was purchased by Eliphalet Whitaker, Jonathan's fourth son. The original house on that tract was located where the Turnbull house now stands. But the bounds of the tract secured by Eliphalet were not the same as those of the second tract of the Whitaker purchase. For this latter tract contained but 122 acres while Eliphalet's purchase comprised 163. Our authority for these statements is the deed given by Jonathan Whitaker and Elizabeth his wife to Jonathan, Jr., by which they conveyed 17 July 1763 all the estate purchased of the Penns except that already sold to Eliphalet. The deed of transfer to Jonathan, Jr. is recorded on the back of the ancient parchment, but gives no bounds to the land thus conveyed, merely stating that it includes all of the original purchase "saving and reserving a certain part and parcel thereof which contains nearly about one hundred and sixty three acres which I formerly conveyed to my son Eliphalet Whitaker, the boundaries of said land will fully appear by reference being had to said deed of conveyance." So far as we know the "said deed of conveyance" is not now in existence. And the record of it if made was in all probability burned when the County buildings at Somerset Court House were ruthlessly destroyed by the Tory Simcoe and his body of Queen's Rangers on 24 October 1779, during their famous or infamous expedition that is known in history as "Simcoe's Raid."

I have not discovered the exact date of Jonathan Whitaker's death which occurred in 1763, his will having been probated 14 October that year. He did not live long after the sale to Jonathan, Jr. of 17th July and the making of his will 12 August. He was buried at Basking Ridge in a portion of the ground that has since been covered by an addition to the church. It is more than likely that he and his family were members of that organization. A parchment copy of the will of Jonathan Whitaker has just been discovered among the papers of my uncle, Dr. Ralph Voorhees, who died 1 April 1907.....It will be of interest to know that the legacy (Seven per cent for the benefit of the Indians quoted elsewhere in this History. H.H.W.) ultimately went to Princeton. Jonathan Whitaker's interest in Indian education was no doubt aroused by his son Nathaniel who was at that time Pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Chelsea near Norwich, Conn. He was born in Huntington, Long Island, 22 February 1730 and after preparing for the Ministry in Princeton, where he graduated under the presidency of Dr. Burr, he was ordained Pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Woodbridge, New Jersey in 1753. He went to his Connecticut charge in 1759, and there came into close association with Rev. Eleazar Wheelock, who was Pastor at Lebanon, and who had in 1754 started a school for indian education. Among his pupils was Samson Occum whose proficiency led to the establishment of Moore's Indian Charity School at Lebanon. Wheelock's interest in this project led to the selection of his neighbor Whitaker to go to Scotland, England and Wales for the purpose of raising funds in behalf of the education and Christianization of the Indians. Rev. Mr Whitaker took with him Samson Occum, who had been licensed as a Presbyterian preacher. They were abroad two years. The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland received them with open arms and indicated hearty sympathy for their plans and purposes. When they came to England the Earl of Dartmouth, then Secretary of American Affairs showed them great kindness and generously promoted their object by his benefactions. King George III is said to have contributed 400 pounds. Occum being the first preacher of the aboriginal tribes to visit Great Britain created a sensation and drew large audiences everywhere. He officiated in George Whitfield's Chapel in Totingham Court before an immense audience and greatly contributed to the success of the mission. In all about 11,000 pounds were secured, and this sum formed the initial foundation of Dartmouth College of which Rev. Eleazar Wheelock was the founder and first President. One of Rev. Mr. Whitaker's experiences abroad is thus related in a letter written to Rev. Eleazar Wheelock under date 19 March 1766:

> "Yesterday the good King went to the house in the midst of the shouts and acclamation of the people in order to sign the bill for the repealing of the accursed Stamp Act. Of this I was a spectator, and a joyful day it was."

The following year the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon Rev. Mr. Whitaker by St Andrews University in Scotland. While in London his portrait was painted by Joshua Reynolds by order of Lord Dartmouth and presented to him. It was finally presented to Dartmouth College by his grand children.

A few words must needs be said of the other children of Jonathan Whitaker. Of Eliphalet, who purchased the southern portion of the tract we learn that in 1782 he purchased land in Chester County, Pa., and later removed to Georgia, where many of his descendants still live. Mary Whitaker married Samuel Brown, who died in 1763, the year of her father's death. Her second matrimonial venture was with Ebenezer White, who was, if I conclude correctly, the son of the widow White who occupied White's Tavern at the time of General Charles Lee's capture by a Company of British Dragoons under Col. Harcourt 13 December 1776. It would be pleasant to believe that she was the "widow White" at that time so far as the romance of the story is concerned, but that would require a double bereavement by the time she had reached her firty third year. In fact we are not sure that at this time she had changed color, so to speak; that is, ceased to be Mrs Brown and become Mrs White, though that is probable. During her second widow-hood, and after the Revolutionary War, she lived for a time at Huntington, Long Island, and then returned and spent the remainder of her days in the White Tavern. Her will dated 28 May 1794 directs that no liquors be used at her funeral. From it we learn of her ancestor on Long Island, Eliphalet Jervis, and of her nephew, Jonathan Whitaker, who was a son of the Rev. Nathaniel, and then in "Cambridge College," (Harvard) who receives a legacy; her "beloved nephews Jonathan Ogden of Morristown and Nathaniel Whitaker of Bernardstown," are nominated as executors. We now turn to Jonathan, Jr. who purchased the homestead of his father in 1763. At that time he was thirty eight years of age and all his seven children were living, the youngest, Nathaniel, being in his fifth year. His wife was Mary Miller of whom we know little except that she survived him and became the owner of the homestead by purchase at vendue. The portion of Jonathan Whitaker's life subsequent to the death of his father was full of trials peculiar to the Revolutionary period. That he was highly respected in the community is evident from the few documents that have come down to us. The first is the certificate of his appointment as:

> "Lieutenant of the Bernard Town Company or Militia in the County of Somerset, commanded by Captain Nathaniel Ayres, by his Excellency Josiah Hardy, Esq., Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over the Provinces of Nova Caesaria, or New Jersey, and Territories thereon depending in America, Chancellor and Vice Admiral in the same, etc."

This was dated 17 May 1762. The second document is the certificate of the appointment of:

> "Mary Smith, widow of John George Smith, late of the County of Somerset, and Jonathan Whitaker"

joint administrators of the estate of the said John George Smith. This was by William Franklin, Esq., Governor, etc., and dated 16 January 1769. It was very possible during the days of Jonathan, Jr. that the family moved to the new dwelling built on the hill on the site ever since occupied. The presence of an excellent spring of water no doubt determined the location and prevented the selection of a more commanding location a hundred yards further to the west. The house then constructed proved a substantial one and continued to shelter the family until 1858, when the east end was torn down and replaced by the structure that is still standing. It was in this house that one of the sad incidents of the Revolutionary War occurred. I refer to the death of Julia Knox, infant daughter of General and Mrs Knox of Boston. It was while the child was being taken by her mother to the headquarters of General Knox near Pluckemin that she became ill and was taken into the house for such help as could be given. But her death followed, and in the cemetery at Bedminster may be seen the stone that covers her grave. It is thus inscribed:

> "Under this stone are deposited the Remains of Julia Knox, an infant who died the second of July, 1779. She was the second daughter of Henry and Lucy Knox of Boston in New England."

The story as handed down states that the child was twelve years of age, which may be possible, though the term "infant" seems to indicate a more tender age.

It is more than likely that at this time slaves were purchased to assist with the work in the house and on the land. The traditions respecting them are few but positive. Near the north end of the farm is a spring still known as "Old Harry's Spring." And nearby was a cabin that also bore Harry's name. He and his family were the last slaves to occupy the cabin and they may possibly have been the only ones. But as the keeping of slaves was quite general in those days it is probable that several generations knew that as home. From 1800 to 1810 there were nearly 2,000 slaves in Somerset County. By 1830 nearly all the blacks had been made free by the operation of laws passed between 1804 and 1820. Hence the cabin at the spring was no longer needed for its original use and was removed to a site in the rear of the family dwelling where it was known as the "wood house" until it was torn down in 1876. But the spring still sends forth its refreshing stream and by its name perpetuates the recollection of former conditions. The only member of the family that has any definite recollection respecting the slaves is Mrs. Ellen Voorhees Shoemaker of Perry, Illinois. She says that her grand father owned Harry and his wife Hattie and their four children, - two boys and two girls, - Violet, Reuben, Electa and Alfred. She does not recollect what became of the older ones, but states that Alfred, who was some ten or twelve years older than she, was a fine fellow and a great help to her mother in caring for the children. He remained in the family until well in his teens when his "time" i. e., until he was twenty five, was sold to Morris Crater of Peapack for $300.00. He is later remembered as Alfred Guess, and was a respected citizen living in Hunterdon County. I do not know that he left any family.

There were stirring occasions during the Revolution for the dwellers along the Mine Brook. On December 12th or 13th in 1776 the remnant of Lee's Army passed along the road on the march to join Washington in Pennsylvania previous, as it proved, to the battles of Trenton and Princeton After these stirring contests Washington's victorious army passed that way again on Monday 7 January 1777, after a Sabbath rest at Pluckemin on its way to the encampment at Morristown. During the winter detachments of soldiers were constantly going back and forth, and it is very probable that during the war nearly every officer of prominence passed through the Mine Brook valley. Jonathan Jr was no doubt well acquainted with William Alexander, who was accorded the Scottish title, the "Earl of Stirling," which he deemed he had inherited. No doubt he had often seen his Lordship ride to the Basking Ridge Presbyterian Church in his coach of state drawn by six white stallions, and looked on in admiration as he gracefully lifted out her Ladyship, who was a sister of Governor Livingston, and their two daughters, Lady Mary and Lady Kitty. Now he was seen wearing the uniform of a Major General, and distinguished as next to Washington the most graceful and dignified officer in the army. The last, and without doubt the most picturesque view offered during the war was the passage, during the summer of 1781, of the French forces on their way to the final victory at Yorktown. We may well believe that all the inhabitants of the Whitaker home were looking on with anxious interest as these foreign troops, in their gaudy uniforms and with proud military bearing, marched up the hill and over the crest on their long and important journey to the south. How the prayers of the people followed them that success would crown the campaign, and how each bosom welled with joy when at last the news came that the British army had surrendered. These were days of gladness and of hope. But how long was the time before the war could really be said to be at an end, and how long thereafter before the affairs of the country became settled. Those were indeed days that required a lofty heroism and a persistent hopefulness in spite of constant discouragements.

In the Whitaker home there was an especial reason for anxiety for the youngest son, Nathaniel, belonged to Captain Ten Eyck's Company of Militia, and was for a considerable portion of the time in the service. He served at first as a private and afterwards was promoted to be Sergeant. One of the traditions respecting his military service is that, while the army was encamped at Middlebrook Heights, near Bound Brook, he was given a day's furlough and walked the twelve miles to Nine Brook and then back again within the twenty four hours. It was a short visit indeed. But homesickness has lent wings to many weary feet, and we may be sure that the few hours spent among his kinsfolk and acquaintenances were ample compensation for the weary trudge.. We do not know the full extent of his military service, and can only add that in 1840, when eighty years of age, he was receiving a pension from the government. . . . . .

Jonathan Whitaker continued to live on the homestead until his death which occurred 17 June 1786, in his 63rd year. He was buried at Basking Ridge and his tombstone may be seen resting against the rear wall of the church. I have not seen a copy of his will, but think I know its principal contents. This knowledge comes from an ancient document called by its makers a "Compound Demonstration." It is the report of a committee consisting of Eph. Martin, David Kirkpatrick and William Logan, who were called in:

> "by the legatees of Jonathan Whitaker Deceased to appraise and Divide the Estate of the Afore Sd Jonathan Whitaker Deceased and to Settle the Same according to the Best of our understanding."

They appraise the 175 acres at "six pound the acre, which amounts to 1050 pounds." With the personal property added the estate was valued at about 1600 pounds. One third of the real estate is set apart for the use of the widow during her life, and the remainder, less a debt of 400 pounds, is divided between the seven children, each of them being first charged with a sum already received. The "Demonstrators" may have satisfied themselves and the family with the correctness of their calculations but I have not as yet been able to see just how they did it. That is to be charged to my obtuseness, perhaps, which I am forced to confess, though I might plead unfamiliarity with calculations involving the use of English currency. I will be glad to submit the paper to any expert who will agree to solve the riddle. This "Compound Demonstration" is undated, but another paper seems to fix the time when the settlement of the estate took place. It is a Sheriff's receipt, and reads as follows:

> "Received 23 September 1788 from Mary Whitaker by the hands of Nathaniel Whitaker the sum of thirty pounds in part payment for the lands sold at the vendue of Jonathan Whitaker.
> (Signed) John Hardenbergh, Shff."

The sale of the estate by the Sheriff must have been in order to give a clear title, for the indebtedness on which judgment was secured was only sixty pounds. The deed given "by John Hardenbergh, Esq., High Sheriff," on 12 February 1788 calls for 262 acres, and comprised all the land originally included in the first trust except the southern edge, which is in fact the northern slope of the mountain south of the Nine Brook recently purchased by Grant B. Schley. From a comparison of amounts and an examination of the descriptions of the various surveys it seems probable that about 13 acres had been added along the eastern border. But of this I cannot be sure at this time. Nor do we understand how it happened that the heirs of Jonathan Whitaker submitted to the "Compound Demonstrators" only 175 acres, when there were 262 there to be sold by the Sheriff. All we can state is that the record declares that 262 acres were sold and purchased by Mary Whitaker for 2 pounds per acre. Thus she becomes the third owner of this tract, succeeding the Paine.

Less than three years after the purchase Mary Whitaker devised by will dated 27 December 1790 "all her personal estate of every nature and kind soever" to her youngest son, Nathaniel Whitaker. She also devised to him all her real estate, consisting of the farm on which she then lived, on condition that he pay to her daughter Mary, who remained unmarried, one hundred pounds. And further Nathaniel was made sole executor of this will.

However, before the death of Mary Whitaker, her purpose that the land should become the possession of her son Nathaniel was accomplished by the sale to him for 500 pounds of her farm, or at least 206 acres of it, the deed being given 17 January 1795. After much searching I have been able to satisfy myself as to the disposition of the 60 acres not included in this transfer. They were evidently sold in 1789 to Benew Dunham or his predecessor in title, and comprised all the land east of the line running through the present Mine Brook school house, the northern portion now dividing the lands of William H. Page and Thomas Douglass, and the southern portion being the road leading to Liberty Corner. My reasons for this conclusion are the record of the sale of a tract of about 60 acres in 1802 by Benew Dunham, the description of which contains the statement that the lines "run as the compass pointed in 1789" and the sale ten years later by the purchaser, Andrew Hagerman, of the same tract, the description evidently being copies from Dunham's deed. Hence the 30 acres subsequently purchased by Garret Voorhees, and now the property of the syndicate, were a part at least, of the original Whitaker purchase.

Thus we find that beginning with 1795 Nathaniel Whitaker became the fourth of the name to own a considerable portion of the Whitaker tract. And we find him paying at the rate of 2½ pounds per acre for land that cost his grandfather forty three years before 12 shillings and 6 pence per acre. Quite an advance indeed, especially as we consider that much of the timber must have been cut in that time. When Nathaniel Whitaker purchased the homestead farm he was thirty seven years of age. Eight years previous, in 1787, he had married Hannah Drake, and their only child, Sarah Whitaker, was born 8 September 1793. The wife did not long survive, and a few years later Ruth Haines became the partner of his joys and sorrows. She was, I presume, the same Ruth Haines whose name appears as one of the witnesses to the will already referred to of her future husband's aunt, Mary White, which was dated 28 May 1794. She also bore him one daughter, Hannah Whitaker, who at the age of sixteen became the wife of Nicholas Arrowsmith.

Nathaniel Whitaker entered into the full possession of the estate in a very favorable time. The affairs of the country had become settled. The old uncertainty under the Confederation had given place to a condition of hopefulness under the Constitution. Washington had met with marked success in his task of inaugurating the new government and had partly completed his second term. . . . . Receiving at this time a large plantation free from incumbrance and considerable money besides he was from early life one of the well-to-do citizens of old Bernards. He was, however, inclined to take life easily, if we may judge from certain indications rather than positive evidence. He preferred to live upon his income rather than upon the proceeds of a vigorous tilling of his farm. Only about 50 acres around the buildings were really worked. The timber was considered of more value than the crops that might be raised after the ardous labor of clearing the land. I do not find that he entered largely into the public life of his generation, though he was at one time chosen by the citizens of the County to the office of Coroner.

His eldest daughter Sarah Whitaker at the age of twenty four became the wife of Garret Voorhees of Middlebush, whose ancestry was entirely Dutch. She was not allowed to leave home after her marriage but remained with her parents until her family became too large for comfortable housing under the ancestral roof. Then her husband purchased a farm of about thirty acres situated to the east of and adjoining the homestead and south of the Nine Brook Road. To this they moved in 1829, and there continued to reside until the death of her father in 1841 when they returned to the house on the hill. This farm in the valley had been part of the original Whitaker purchase, and came to Garret Voorhees through Reuen Dunham who purchased it in 1789; Andrew Hagerman, 1802; Peter Stout, 1812; Lamah Van Doren, 1813; Jeremiah Field, 1815, and Michael Field in 1819; the house was situated not far from the present dwelling but a little farther to the west and also farther in from the road. There was a saw mill along the brook, near a dam, the traces of which are still visible.

As we have seen the western boundary of the Whitaker purchase was also the western line of the Penn tract - a line running due north according to the survey of 1717. The land to the west of this line and extending to the north branch was taken up in 1740 by Alexander and Dunstar, and subsequently a portion of it adjoing the Whitaker purchase became the property of Alexander Linn, who was among the number of men that in the early days of the last century gave distinction to the Township. His name appears as witness to the will of Mary Whitaker dated 27 December 1790. The Linn dwelling occupied the site of the Whitenack house. James Linn graduated from Princeton in 1769. . . . . Aside from the fact that James Linn was a neighbor of Nathaniel Whitaker and witnessed his mother's will, he enters into our story in this wise. On 19 January 1804 he sold to his neighbor Whitaker for 311 pounds 2 shillings "Proclamation money of New Jersey" the farm occupied by "Barney Murphy," containing 61½ acres. This is the land south of the Nine Brook road and west of the Penn line to the former Dillon line. The western boundary line began near a large chestnut tree that stood until recently where Mr Dillon's farm road leaves the Nine Brook road and runs in a southerly direction across the Nine Brook to the corner of the woods. Only a chain distant from this corner is the White Oak stump that marked the Penn line in the far away days, and that still gives definiteness to the location of that line. The large chestnut tree was taken down but a year or two ago. The Barney Murphy house may have stood near it, as did later a school house, which though still remembered by some elderly people, has long since disappeared. By this purchase the Penn line south of the road ceased to be a line of division, and finally all traces of it disappeared. Respecting this purchase, it should also be remarked that though concluded in 1804 the price paid is stated in English currency, while earlier sales by James Linn, as well as those of later date, use United States currency. This deed was signed by James Linn alone. The other deeds are said to be by "James Linn and Margaret his wife" but when she comes to affix her signature she signs herself "Peggy Linn." By his will James Linn directed his executors to sell his property, and at a public vendue "held at the house of Mr Samuel Perry, innkeeper, at Basking Ridge the 28th of March 1821" Nathaniel Whitaker purchased for $300.50 the remaining portion of Linn's estate 34 acres lying north "of the great road" and having the old Penn line as its eastern boundary. Whitaker, it is said, showed some hesitancy in offering this small price, $7.00 per acre, but finally concluded that the timber was worth the money, and consented to accept the land as a gift. The result was that this tract also being incorporated in the Whitaker estate and field boundaries being in part re-arranged above the road also, little was left to indicate the position of the original Penn line.

The western line of the Whitaker estate suffered violence on another occasion, as we must needs show. When in 1822 the Linn tract was purchased Andrew Egan was the owner of the land further to the west extending to the road leading to the lake. This farm was later sold to Daniel Ludlow, the father of the present occupants. The house on this farm was after the purchase of 1821 close to the Whitaker line, and hence not far from the swamp. Pleading sympathy for his fowls that were tempted to stray beyond the bounds of his domain to the juicy pastures of his neighbor Whitaker, Ludlow succeeded in bargaining in 1839 for a small tract of six acres, and thus made it possible to remove the line fence further from his dwelling. The sale was no sooner consummated than Ludlow began removing his dwelling and in time all his buildings to a new site close to the new line. It may be guessed that he had also discovered that his chickens were by this time sufficiently trained to resist the temptation to wander beyond his boundaries: or what is nearer the truth, he wanted to get away from the swamp and coveted the very eligible site thus secured. At any rate the Ludlow house still stands affording a commanding view over a delightful vista of field and forest stretching far away over the hills of Hunterdon. You see they had learned to dig wells in those days, following the example of Isaac the Patriarch of Peace and hence were not compelled to dwell longer by the fountains of water.

It was during this time that the family transferred its allegiance from the Basking Ridge Presbyterian Church to the Reformed Church of Bedminster. There were a number of contributing reasons that led to this change. Perhaps the first that should be mentioned was the matter of distance, the former church being five miles away, and the latter only two. Then the son-in-law Garret Voorhees was of Reformed ancestry and no doubt preferred the Bedminster associations. As this church had ceased to use the Dutch language in its services the objection on this ground had ceased to have weight. But the final reason was the Minister himself. Nathaniel Whitaker had said that if Rev. John C. Van Derveer were called it would be an indication of Providence that his time to go to Bedminster had come. The call was issued, the minister came, and the Whitakers turned their faces to the west for spiritual guidance. A couple of certificates of dismission are among the highly prized documents that have come down to us. One reads as follows:

> "These certify that Sarah Whitaker, wife of Garret Voorhees, is a member on full communion and good standing in the church of Basking Ridge, and that so far as known to us, she is sound in the faith and exemplary in her deportment. As such, at her request, we do hereby affectionately dismiss her from our communion, and cordially recommend her to the fellowship and care of the Reformed Dutch Church of Bedminster, under the pastoral care of the Revd Isaac Fisher.
> Basking Ridge, 15 October 1827 — By order of the Session, John C. VanDerveert, Mod."

Another document in this connection reads as follows:

> "April 30th, 1831. Received One Hundred and Seven Dollars in full for a seat in the Bedminster Church which I have sold to Nathaniel Whitaker. (Signed) John Suydam."

It only remained the purchase of a plot in the cemetery adjoining the church to make the transfer of allegiance complete. But that transfer did not end the matter, for in the process of time nearly the whole family has gotten back into the Presbyterian fold.

Nathaniel Whitaker continued to live on the ancestral estate until his death which occurred 25 October 1841. By his will he left the farm and considerable other property to his daughter Sarah (Whitaker) Voorhees His widow did not long survive him and upon the settlement of the estate the new owner or owners removed to the house on the hill. There were eleven children in the family, five sons and six daughters, all of whom grew to maturity, and all but two have living descendants. At this writing however only two of the children survive.

Garret Voorhees, who now assumed full direction of the farm, was a man of energy and being blessed with several sons he was able, and by reason of the size of his family, was impelled, to follow a course quite different from that pursued by his father-in-law. The vacant lands were cleared and brought under cultivation. A lime kiln was constructed and the use of this fertilizing agency added greatly to the productivity of the soil. He was of commanding presence, being fully six feet tall, and as he was a Justice of the Peace, was familiarly known as the "Squire." The property now consisted of about 300 acres, and soon a new barn was needed. This was built in 1853 on the site it still occupies. Respecting the barn that it replaced we are told that it was originally built in the valley not very far from the original dwelling. When that home was abandoned for the new one on the hill the barn was deemed too good to be left behind. Hence the task was undertaken of removing it to a new site on the hill. This proved greater than had been anticipated and many were the discouragements by the way. When at length on a Saturday evening the barn had been brought within a reasonable distance from the house the work was abandoned in despair, and the building left on site not at first selected. This was not far from the arbor in the present garden. By its use the family became accustomed to having the buildings located on different sides of the road, and this, perhaps had something to do with the selection of the site for the new barn. For this, the boards for the siding were carted by the eldest son, John, from Milford on the Delaware two days being required for each trip. The house remained as it was until 1858 when a new east end was constructed, the middle portion somewhat remodeled, and a large kitchen of but one story constructed on the west end. As thus reconstructed the dwelling proved one of the most attractive in the section. A feature of the kitchen was a large Dutch oven that occupied the middle portion from which the writer remembers having seen taken in his boyhood days the bread and pies that supplied the needs of a large family. In 1876 this oven was taken down, and the kitchen divided into two rooms, the one to the south being fitted up as a dining room. With other modifications that did not greatly affect the exterior appearance of the house, it remained as it was constructed in 1858 until its purchase in 1902? The repairs of 1876 included also the removal of all the buildings that were located in the rear of the house, one of them being the slave cabin, and the construction of the building that was standing at the time of the purchase by Mr Page. Two large cherry trees some five feet in diameter that stood to the west of the house, and but a few feet from it, were then removed, as they had begun to decay. Respecting these trees it is stated that the shoots from which they grew were secured from Lord Stirling's nurseries near Basking Ridge. He was a pioneer in horticultural experiments, and imported from abroad the best vines and fruit trees he could secure.

In 1856 John, the eldest of Garret and Sarah Voorhees' children purchased 70 acres that had formed the eastern portion of the estate, and erected thereon the dwelling and other buildings that now stand on the Dilley tract. No further sales were effected during the life of Sarah Voorhees. At the time of her death on 8 August 1863 all her children had married and removed from the homestead except the youngest daughter and son, Ruth and Ralph.

They conducted the farm until the latter's eyesight began to fail. As the father was approaching eighty years of age, some settlement was deemed necessary, and as a result the farm was offered at public sale. It was purchased by one of the sons, Samuel S. Voorhees, he having agreed to sell to his brother John in case of his securing the farm, seventy acres adjoining the latter's property. By this sale the tract was divided into two nearly equal portions. In 1872 John Voorhees sold his Mine Brook farm to his brother-in-law Aaron Dilley, who had previously been in possession of a portion of the second of the original tracts of the Whitaker purchase. These he continued to own until his death in 1896. Hence for over twenty years Aaron Dilley was in possession of a larger portion of the Whitaker land than any one else. It is doubtful if he knew of this fact, however.

When Samuel S. Voorhees purchased the homestead in 1865 the heirs at law of Sarah Whitaker Voorhees, including her husband, joined in giving him a deed for the property thus purchased. And this deed forms the basis for all subsequent transfers. However, after the sale by Samuel to his brother John, less than half of the land retained by him had been included in the original purchase, ninety acres having come through Alexander and Dunstar, Alexander Linn and James Linn, to his grandfather Nathaniel Whitaker. And when in 1900 he sold a portion of his farm to John M. Dillon, only about fifty acres of the original Whitaker tract remained in his possession.

IN THE FIRST PARAGRAPH OF THIS HISTORY,UNDER THE HEADING JONATHAN WHITAKER,IT WILL BE NOTED THAT IT STATES:

> "At Huntington Jonathan Whitaker and his wife Elizabeth became members of the Congregational Church under the Pastorate of the Reverend Ebenezer Prime,and here seven of their eight children were baptised."

The Reverend Prime was a distinguished Revolutionary Divine,and the fact that he baptised seven of Jonathan Whitaker's children gives us an excuse to here make some reference to him.

Ebenezer Prime was born in the year 1700 and was therefore 75 years of age when hostilities with the Mother Country began. Though past three score and ten when the trumpet of war pealed over the land, his aged ear caught the sound, and the last failing energies of his life were devoted to his country. To one who had no future in this world, nothing but a solemn sense of duty to his God and his Country could have aroused him to enlist in a struggle, the end of which he never expected to see. Graduating from Yale College in 1718, he began at the early age of nineteen his ministerial labors at Huntington, Long Island,where he remained until the close of his long and useful life. After the disastrous battle of Long Island his parish was invaded by the British and he and his son were compelled to flee for safety. The latter, with his family, left the Island, while the aged Pastor found shelter in a remote and secluded part of his parish. The firm stand he had taken on the side of Liberty was well known to the British, and his name was never mentioned by them except with curses. The Church in which he had so long preached was converted into a military depot, and desecrated by the licentious soldiers, who mutilated his library by tearing to pieces his most valuable books and consigning them to the flames. He died 2 August 1779, and was buried in the graveyard hard by the dilapidated Church from which he had been driven. Afterwards, the notorious Tory Colonel Thompson of Massachusetts, who subsequently became Count Rumford, quartered his troops in the town, and pulled down the Church and used the timbers and boards to construct barracks and block houses. To insult and outrage the feelings of the inhabitants of Huntington still more these were erected in the center of the burying ground, and the gravesleveled, so that the consecrated spot became a hard trodden common. The grave stones were pulled up and used as stones to build their ovens. From these the bread would often be taken with the inverted inscription stamped in the crust. The Colonel, to show his malignity, pitched his marquee at the head of Mr Prime's grave, so that, to use his own language,"he might tread on the old rebel every time he went out or in."

The second child of JONATHAN WHITAKER, Senior, and his wife Elizabeth (Jarvis) Whitaker, was MARY WHITAKER. As will have been noted, she first married Samuel Brown. On his death she married Ebenezer White, and after his death became known as "The Widow White." She altered her dwelling, and operated a Tavern, no doubt for pecuniary reasons due to her advanced age. The place became well known as "The Widow White's Tavern." It was located in Basking Ridge.

It was in this Tavern that General Charles Lee was captured by the British 13 December 1776, and it seems appropriate to here describe the circumstances of the event, which we have in considerable detail from written descriptions of descendants of those who were implicated.

CAPTURE OF GENERAL CHARLES LEE.

At the close of the 12th day of December 1776, when Lee's Army crossed the north branch of the Raritan and entered Bedminster, his battalions pressed on the Lamington highway until the head of the column had passed a considerable distance beyond the crossing of the Peapack road: the troops then deployed to the right and encamped, the greater part of them occupying the lands of Peter Melick. The roads and fields were encumbered with cannon and baggage wagons; camp fires gleamed on the hillsides around, where were stretched tired, bronze faced men with ragged blankets for a covering and knapsacks and bundles for pillows. Sorry looking soldiers they were with their patched clothing, worn shoes, cobbled with strings. Peter Melick was a Royalist, loyal to the Crown, and he had a "protection paper" from the British military authorities, but he had not anticipated a Continental visitation. His fears, and for which he had prepared, were of predatory bands of British Light Horse. In these circumstances, he did not consider it wise to remain at home and welcome the patriots - his military guests - but his neighbors did, and at the same time informed the troops that the owner of the land on which they were bivouacked was a British "Exempt." As was the fashion of the time, vengeance followed. Peter's fence rails fed the camp fires, and his smoke houses fed the troops, as did his chickens, hogs and cattle. Peter's eldest daughter, Catherine Melick, was then a child. She became the wife of Enos Mundy and died in 1863, over ninety years of age. From her parents she learned of this, and the capture of General Lee, and her statement was taken down in writing and preserved by one of her descendants.

As is well known, Lee did not continue this far with his troops, but stopped for the night with a small guard and some of his aides at a Tavern kept by the Widow White at Basking Ridge. It is probable that General Sullivan, second in command, quartered at Aaron Melick's house. In the morning an officer came in great haste and announced the capture of the commanding General. Mrs Mundy says:

> "There was a great fuss made in the morning because a big officer had been captured or killed, or something of that sort, and grandfather Melick had to go to Germantown on horseback with soldiers....."

When the troops deployed on Melick's farm, Lee turned his command over to Sullivan, left his troops, and governed by some freak or whim (or sinister purpose) took up his quarters at Widow White's Tavern in Basking Ridge. He retained with him Major William Bradford of his personal staff, several other men of his military party and a small guard.

At four o'clock on the morning the 13th of December there arrived at Widow White's Tavern one Major James Wilkinson, a Staff Officer of another Continental General - Horatio Gates - who, like Lee, was jealous of Washington's popularity. Major Wilkinson had a letter from General Gates concerning some regiments he was sending to the aid of General Washington, being able to spare them on account of the collapse of British opposition in the vicinity of Fort Ticonderoga, and their retreat to Canada. Major Wilkinson learning that Washington was beyond the Delaware, turned aside and took it to General Lee, who was next of rank. General Lee read the letter in bed, promising to give an answer after breakfast, whereupon Major Wilkinson lay down on his blanket before a comfortable fire until daylight. General Lee remained in bed until 8 o'clock, when he came down stairs half dressed, and in his slippers. Major Scammel of Sullivan's staff called to obtain orders for the morning's march. After a map had been spread on the table and examined, Lee said: "Tell General Sullivan to move down towards Pluckamin." The General then spent some time listening to complaints of the soldiers, to whom he gave little satisfaction, and displayed impatience at their importunities. Lee did not breakfast before ten o'clock and then sat down to write to General Gates. A single quotation from this letter will show it's general tone and the attitude assumed by the writer toward General Washington:

"Entre nous a certain great man is most dammably deficient."

Meanwhile Major Wilkinson had his horse saddled and brought to the door and then sat down at a window and awaited with patience for the letter. At about high noon he suddenly saw a troop of dragoons turn from the highway and dart down the lane toward the house, which, in a few seconds, they reached and, having opened files, surrounded. "Here," cried Major Wilkinson, "are the British Cavalry." "Where is the guard!" exclaimed Lee: "Why dont they fire; do, sir, see what has become of the guard." As careless as the General, the guards, with arms stacked, were sunning themselves on the south side of the house. They were soon overcome, two brave fellows who resisted being killed by sabre strokes. A very short but spirited defence was made by Lee's suite who, firing from the windows, killed several of the dragoons, including a Coronet. So near was Harcourt (their commander) to being killed that a ball carried away the ribbon of his queue. Among Lee's officers was a Frenchman, M. Jean Louis de Virnejoux, who acted with the greatest bravery in defending the house. The British called on Lee to surrender, threatening that five minutes delay would insure the burning of the building. The discomfitted officer almost immediately appeared at the door saying: "Here is the General; he has surrendered." He was hastily placed on Major Wilkinson's horse, his legs being firmly bound to the stirrup leathers; the trumpet sounded "assembly", and just as he was, without hat, and in slippers and dressing gown, they hurried him off to New Brunswick. The British also carried off with them, strapped on a trooper's horse, M. de Gaiant, a French officer, who was on his way to pay his respects to Genr. Washington, and who had joined Lee's column as a means of safe transit.

The capture of Lee was discovered to have been in a measure accidental. Suspicion was first levelled at the Kelicks who were thought to have conveyed the news of Lee being at the Tavern to the British Officers. However, it later developed that they received their information in another way.

It seems that Elder Muklewrath of the Mendham Presbyterian Church had been with the General the night before, complaining that the troops had stolen one of his horses. On the following morning he fell in with a detachment of the 16th British Light Dragoons under command of Lieutenant Colonel, the Honorable William Harcourt, afterward the Third Earl Harcourt, G. C. B., which was reconnoitering in the neighborhood. In some manner the Elder divulged the proximity of Lee, and it is said either voluntary or involuntarily guided the dragoons to General Lee's headquarters.

This extraordinary clause was found in General Lee's Will after his death seven years later:

> "I desire most earnestly that I may not be buried in any Church, or Churchyard, or within a mile of any Presbyterian or Anabaptist Meeting House; for since I have resided in this Country I have kept so much bad company when living that I do not choose to continue it when dead."

Perhaps Lee had the Mendham Elder in mind.
